June 1953-250 Me Sume 1953-250 National Catholic Magazine

> Elizabeth II (See Page 11)

OUR TEEN-AGE DRINKERS

by Milton Lomack

IGHTEST STAR IN THE FLAG

FA PRERSURE REPRESENTATION OF THE PROPERTY AND ADDRESS OF THE PROPERTY ADDRESS OF THE PROPERTY AND ADDRESS OF THE PROPERTY ADDRESS OF THE PROPERTY

BEST GIFT OF ALL-

For HIGH SCHOOL GRADUATES!

Parents, Relatives, Teachers and Friends, Please Note! Can You Think of Anything More Helpful? Teen-Agers Tell Us They Enjoy THE SIGN's Modern Features: Sports, Books, Radio & TV, Stage & Screen. Some Schools Give A Gift Subscription To Every One of Their Graduates.

For COLLEGE GRADUATES!

These Young Men & Women Going Forth Into Today's World Like THE SIGN's Modern Manner, Too! In Current Fact & Comment Every Month, And Also in The Sign Post, They'll Find The Catholic View That Gives the Clue To the Questions They'll Be Asked About Religion, Faith, Morals!

For WEDDINGS & ANNIVERSARIES!

You'll Have the Satisfaction of Giving "the gift that keeps on giving." A New, Colorful Issue Every Month, For One Year or Two Years, Or As Many As You Choose. Most Catholic Couples—and Families, Like THE SIGN Around the House!

Attractive Gift Announcement Card

Rates: Only $3 Per Year Two Years for $5

The Sign

GIFT SERVICE DESK • UNION CITY, NEW JERSEY

Please accept this Gift from Sheffield, England WITH OUR COMPLIMEN'

IS EXQUISITE 6-PIECE PASTRY FORK SETTING

IF YOU JOIN THE AROUND-THE-WORLD SHOPPERS CLUB NOW

To demonstrate the quality and uniqueness of the Around-the-World Shoppers Club selections sent to members every month from abroad, we want to send you this beautiful 6-piece nickel silver Pastry Set, with our compliments if you join the club now.

.This set is the famous LOXLEY, one of the most honored products of Shef-field, England, and if obtainable here, would probably be priced at $5.00 retail. It is typical of the values and quality of the gifts our members receive every month for only $2.00, postpaid, duty free.

Imagine yourself shopping in the tiny villages and the big cities of Europe, Asia, Africa, South America, the Near East and the Far East. Imagine yourself examining the hundreds of unusual articles peculiar to each foreign land, many of them hand made, then selecting the very choice est in interest, usefulness, beauty and value, and having them sent to you for only $2.00 each!

Yes, you can now enjoy the thrill of re-ceiving a surprise package every month from France, Italy, Spain, Holland, Swed-en, England, India, Japan or some other distant shore-for only $2.00, delivered to your door. You pay no postage, no duty. The value is guaranteed to be more than satisfactory to you in every instance.

How, you ask, can this be done? The secret is in the new, unique service offered by the Around-the-World Shoppers Club plus the magic of the American dollar Foreign nations are in urgent need of American dollars to support native industries. They are glad to offer tremendous merchandise values in exchange.

Thus you get more for your money—and at the same time you are doing your bit to improve world conditions by lending a helping hand to our neighbors around the world

CONVERSATION PIECES FROM ABROAD

Our representatives abroad are constantly searching for the best items and the biggest bargains available. They not only attend the great international fairs and exhibitions, but they travel the highways and byways of foreign lands to discover the unique, the unusual, the beautiful articles which are destined to become conversation pieces when worn, displayed or used in

A THRILLING SURPRISE EACH MONTH

With each package will come the fas-cinating story of the origin and significance of the article you receive-adding glamour to each shipment.

Think of the fun of receiving such exotic "surprise packages" month by month! It is like shopping around the world! That is the thrill of membership in the Around-the-World Shoppers Club. Each month you'll look forward to the arrival of your foreign shipment with eager anticipation. Each month you'll experience the crowning thrill of the treasure-hunter when you open it to see what delightful surprise it has brought.

YOU PAY NOTHING EXTRA FOR MEMBERSHIP

It costs nothing to join the Around-the-World Shoppers Club. There are no member-ship fees or dues, You pay only for the regular monthly selections of merchandise on any of the following plans:

3 MONTHS MEMBERSHIP
(3 consecutive shipments).

6 MONTHS MEMBERSHIP

(6 consecutive shipments) $11.00
12 MONTHS MEMBERSHIP
(12 consecutive shipments) $20.00
(Note: the U. S. Post Office Dept. charges a service fee of 15c for delivering foreign packages, which is collected by your postman and cannot be prepaid.

YOU CAN CANCEL AT ANY TIME

You may cancel your membership at any time (please give 30 days' notice to allow for transmittal to our foreign office) and the unused portion of your payment will be refunded in full. Even will be refunded in full. Even better, if you are not delighted upon receiving your first regular monthly selection, you may keep it free of charge along with your LOXLEY Pastry Fork Setting gift and receive a full refund of the total amount paid.

EXTRA REWARD FOR JOINING NOW!

Why not start your membership right now, while you can have this 6-piece pas-try setting as an EXTRA GIFT sent to you direct from Sheffield, and get the benefit of the really remarkable values now available? You won't want to miss a single shipment!

Use the coupon below or write, enclosing remittance for the membership term desired.

GIVE A MEMBERSHIP TO SOMEONE SPECIAL!

What could make a more interesting and out-of-the-ordinary gift than a membership in the Around-the-World Shoppers Club? Who would imagine that such lovely foreign products cost only $2.00 each in American dollars? Month after month they are delivered to the recipient from abroad to serve as continuing reminders of your thoughtfulness.

Around-the-Wor 24 Treat Place	rld Shoppers Club, Dep , Newark 2, N. J.	ot. 779,
Setting, direct : EXTRA GIFT. A lection of foreign	from Sheffield, England, Also start regular monthly n merchandise, to be ship	me my LOXLEY Pastry Fork postpaid, duty free, as an y shipments of the club's sepped direct to me from counthe following term of mem-
6 Months N	Membership$ 6.00 Membership$11.00 Membership$20.00	l enclose remittance for $
Name		000000000000000000000000000000000000000
		(Please Print)
Address		00000000000000000000000000000000000000
City & Zone		State
Do not person items, as I to use them References:	nalize any For those may wish will per as gifts. use the Franklin-Washington Tree	e items which you rsonalize, please following initials ust Co., Newark 2, N. J.

READ WHAT MEMBERS SAY ABOUT THE CLUB:

"I experienced all the delight I originally anticipated when the exquisite flacon from Paris was opened today. I have wrapped it up again as it was when I first picked it up so that my husband may have all the thrill I did from opening it — foreign postmarks and all! Thank you so much for this lovely idea. It has been well worth my money just for the pleasure I received today."

—M. L., New Cumberland, Pa. I experienced all the delight I origi-

"I think the idea of bringing the crafts of the world's artists and artisans to us who do not have the opportunity to seek them out for ourselves, is one offering great advantage to all con-cerned, and with, perhaps, unexpected and indirect results that will make for the accomplishment of decidedly better understanding and relationship between ourselves and our world neighbors."

—Mrs. T. J. McA., Marblehead, Mass.

"I want to take this opportunity to thank you most heartily for the two gifts which have come to me thus far, as a member of the Around-the-World Shoppers Club. I can assure you they were received with genuine delight, showing exquisite taste in their selection."—M. Q., Philadelphia, Pa.

(Note: All original letters are on file in our office)

Around-The-World Shoppers Club, Dept. 779,24 Treat Place, Newark 2, N.J.

Enjoy America

Is your vacation in August? Can you join a congenial "traveling house party" leaving Chicago Aug. 2 for the West?

Many readers of The Sign are experienced and frequent travelers, often looking for alluring journeys to far-away places, and pleased when they find something extraordinarily good. Others are "rocking chair explorers" though desire to travel and see the world is strong, they hesitate to venture forth into strange, distant states, unless they can go with folks they know, or with groups where they will feel "at home."

Recognizing the great interest almost everybody has in travel, and to provide opportunity for readers of this magazine to have available a trustworthy vacation tour, under Christian auspices, the "Tour of the West" has been carefully arranged. The trip will result in closer knowledge of Catholic institutions in cities to be visited, as well as personal experiences in three national parks and a dozen western cities.

Our 1953 party will be fully enrolled before mid-July, as advance reservations are excellent. Write for free copy of our special "Tour of the West" folder, study it over, then ask questions if interested, or enroll for this delightful and memorable vacation trip. Please address The Sign, Union City, N. J.

Anita Colby

EDITORS OF THE SIGN:

Congratulations on having Anita Colby's material. You can be sure that it will create much interest.

THE SIGN, with its prestige and splendid format, will be sure to receive many many commendations on Miss Colby's series.

MARY-CATHERINE McDonough Dorchester, Mass.

Spain

EDITORS OF THE SIGN:

I was interested in the remarks on Spain contained in a letter from Mr. C. L. Hayter in your February issue and should like to know more about the "evidence" he mentions of "farcical trials and the execution of innocent people."

I came to Spain from Britain several months ago, expecting to find the same setup as I had found in Italy and Germany when they were ruled by dictators. Within a short time I began to realize that, if there was a tyranny in Spain, it was a remarkably mild one. For one thing, Spaniards were not afraid to criticize the government to a foreigner they did not know and in the presence of other Spaniards. The second thing that seemed strange was that the criticisms one heard were those one might hear of any government in Britain or America-that wages were being kept too low, that there was graft, that certain ministers were not up to their job, and so on. The thing that surprised me most was that the complaints which Spaniards made against the regime were not those made by critics outside of Spain.

A SCOT IN SPAIN

Veteran's Approval

EDITORS OF THE SIGN:

THE SIGN is eagerly sought and goes through many hands in the reading. It is a splendid and thoughtful method of furthering the Apostolate of the Press. We would be hard put in Veterans Hospitals to provide good Catholic reading were it not for such kindness as yours and an anonymous donor.

REV. FRANCIS L. SULLIVAN
Veterans Administration Hospital GULFPORT, MISSISSIPPI

Strictly Canadian

EDITORS OF THE SIGN:

For some years now, we have been constant readers of your uniquely good Catholic magazine and up to now have found little or nothing in it to criticize. Actually, on taking a second look at the book review on page 73 of the April issue, we realize that it is not The Sign which has riked us but the author, Dr. John A. O'Brien, who has calmly appropriated our Canadian Martyrs and labeled them American.

After all, these heroic men were without exception citizens of New France, or Canada as it came to be called, and with the possible exclusion of Father Jogues suffered martyrdom on what was then and still is Canadian soil. Even the appellation "North American Martyrs" would have had some justification, but it will go down hard with us if we must change the names of all our churches dedicated to the Canadian Martyrs to read American Martyrs.

American historians have managed to purloin Alexander Graham Bell, who invented the telephone in Canada while still a Canadian citizen. Do let us keep our Canadian Martyrs.

FRANCIS MACNAMARA

ILLE BIGRAS, QUEBEC, CANADA

New Easter Vigil

EDITORS OF THE SIGN:

It might interest some of your readers to know that the entire theme of the "National Liturgical Convention" for 1952 was "The New Easter Vigil." Copies of its proceedings may be obtained for two dollars from The Liturgical Conference, Elsberry, Missouri.

REV. JUSTIN MULCAHY, C. P. WEST HARTFORD, CONN.

Corrections

EDITORS OF THE SIGN:

I read with interest in the February issue of The Sign an illustrated article about a graduate of ours, Fred Gentile. The article told in detail of the work he is doing in ecclesiastical art. I was a little unhappy to read that Fred was reputed to have graduated from "Classical School of Design."

For your information, Fred graduated from Classical High School here in Providence and received his B.F.A. degree in illustration from Rhode Island School of Design in 1949. We are a professional college founded in 1878. We grant B.F.A. and B.S. degrees in fifteen different fields of design

GILBERT M. CONGDON, JR. Director of Public Relations Rhode Island School of Design

Providence, R. J. (Continued on page 78)

THE SIGN

NATIONAL CATHOLIC MAGAZINE

Monastery Place, Union City, N. J.

JUNE

1953

VOL. 32

No. 11

ARTICLES

ally,

re-

we

has A.

our

them

hout

Can-

the suf-

and ation

e had hard es of adian

ed to o ine still

our

AMARA

lers to

52 was ts prodollars

lsberry,

C. P.

ary ise about

The ars doing inhappy we grad-Design." aduated in Proviegree in thool of

onal col-F.A. and fields of DON, JR. tions f Design

The American Scene

Hollywood's Nice GirlJerry Cotter	9
Our Teen-age Drinkers	14
Good Old Big City	48

The World Scene

The Anointing of the Queen	11
16th Century Housing Project (A Sign Picture Story)	23
Brightest Star in the FlagJohn E. Dineen	26
A Catholic Looks at UNESCO	51

Various

Various
Take Up the Cross	32
Fathers are V.I.P.'s	34
Communist Crazy Quilt	54
Romance in the Spring (A Sign Picture Story)	64

SHORT STORIES

The Magic PalaceFrank Bennett	18
Marriages are MadeLeslie Gordon Barnard	40
The Big Man	56

EDITORIALS

Current Fact and Comment	and Dagger Style Ralph Gorman, C.P.	4
	d Comment	5

THE PASSIONIST MISSIONS

NTERTAIN	MENT

ENTING A ANNALES

Stage	and	Scre	en			0			۰				۰	Jeri	ry	Cotter	37
Radio	and	Tel	evisi	on.							0			. Joh	n	Lester	46
Sports					 							0	٠	Don	D	Dunphy	66

FEATURES

Letters	2
The Grimy Towns—Poem	22
People	30
Woman to Woman	45
Commencement—Poem Patricia MacGill	50
The Gardener—Poem	50
The Scourging Gerald Vann, O.P.	55
Tall on the Cross—PoemLouise Juarez	55
Sign Post	60
A Look at the World	63
Books	68

Cover Photo from British Information Services

EDITOR

REV. RALPH GORMAN, C.P.

ASSOCIATE EDITORS

REV. DAMIAN REID, C.P. REV. WILFRED SCANLON, C.P. REV. JUDE MEAD, C.P.

CONTRIBUTING EDITORS

JOHN C. O'BRIEN (Washington)
JERRY COTTER (Drama)

DON DUNPHY (Sports)

KATHERINE BURTON
(Women's Interests)

Rev. ALOYSIUS McDonough, C.P., (Sign Post)

JOHN LESTER (Radio and TV)
CLIFFORD LAUBE (Poetry)

ART DIRECTOR

FRANK ROSSI

BUSINESS-CIRCULATION

REV. DONALD NEALIS, C.P., Business Manager

WILLIAM C. REILLY, Promotion Director

FRANK R. MAGNIN, Advertising Manager

FIELD REPRESENTATIVES

REV. PIUS TREVOY, C.P., Director REV. FRANCIS FLAHERTY, C.P.

REV. HUGH CARROLL. C.P.

REV. TERENCE BRODIE, C.P.

REV. BRIAN MAHEDY, C.P.

MISSION DEPARTMENT

REV. EMMANUEL TRAINOR, C.P.,

Procurator

THE SIGN a monthly publication is cward, edited, and published at UNION CITY, N. 3., by the Passionist Fathers. (Legal Title-Passionist Missions, Inc.) Subscription price 33.00 per 38.00, in advances single copies, 25c. Canada, 1962. The Committee of the Commit

Tune, 1953

SIGN

ditor's page

The News: Cloak and Dagger Style

THE writer of a story or a play tries to pack it with dramatic razzle-dazzle. He has some form of doom turning up at every dark alley or every innocent sip of soda pop. His idea is to keep our hearts shuttling up and down between our slippers and our larynx like an express elevator-guessing, worrying, and hoping, in cycles.

There is no harm in this make believe. It is a healthy catharsis for the spirit which has gotten bored or tired from too much engrossment with itself. It is entertainment.

But the important thing is that the customer understands it is entertainment. It is not reality, even though the best of it seems real. You go for it with full knowledge that you will be foxed, and hoping you will be foxed "but good." You spend an hour or so chasing the tail of your own emotions-and you love it.

Then you go to bed and forget it. You don't lie awake fretting about the frontier sheriff who was almost chilled by the resentful, jail-breaking gunman. You don't say an anxious prayer to protect Little Red Riding Hood the next time she fetches groceries to Grandma and gets mixed up in her zoology. Those characters don't exist. You enjoyed the illusion that they did. But it's over now and you are back to earth, not even breathing hard.

Obviously this method of dramatic conflict must not be used when reporting real news, or somebody is bound to get hurt—maybe half the world.

News reporting is not meant to give the reader's emotions a roller-coaster ride. That kind of presentation will hold his attention, all right. But it will put him out of touch with reality and leave him confused. In a news report the customer asks primarily for truth, not fun. What is said, he will accept as truth, not as mere literary horsingaround with a story.

Unhappily, news is frequently offered in the stage and story-book manner. As the never-ending seesaw of undecided battle. Recently, the new Soviet peace offensive has come in for such treatment. The pattern went something like this:

Malenkov's power, we were told, is shaky at home. He has to go slow. It took Stalin five years to consolidate his position in the Soviet. Georgi can't afford to rush things. And we . . .? We can breathe a little easier and hope for the best.

At this point, the commentators pull a switch on us. Malenkov, they want us to remember, is a man of no refinement, entirely ruthless, unacquainted with Western ideas and totally unsympathetic to them. Trigger finger, very itchy. So we'd better watch out and not neglect to lock the door at night.

Having soothed us and then frightened us out of our wits, they start a new cycle. Up we go again: The Communists really mean to come to terms in Korea, this time. Korea is a worse drain on them than on us. So, let's cheer up. At least up to the point of cautious optimism.

But here again we get dropped: This new development in Korea, we are told, is the worst threat of all. A slier, silkier seduction, by a serpent craftier than Stalin. It will frighten or tempt our allies away from us, smash NATO, and the last state will be worse than the first. So let's pick up again with the despondency we were feeling two moves back.

THAT is the method. Very dramatic. Holds public interest and probably registers in increased circulation. But it is the old "Wolf, wolf" story, which works out badly in real life. It leaves the public emotionally exhausted and unable to identify a real alarm.

Most publishers probably can't do anything about it. They are caught in a system and must live down to the practice of the less responsible.

The public, however, can help itself. It only has to remember that global wars just can't be won every week in time for the Sunday Edition and then gradually lost by Thursday.

Better try to elect the best men to office. Go by what they say. And stay cool.

You can go wrong that way, too. But not regularly once a week. Which is some improvement, anyway.

Father Ralph Gorman, CP.

Fact and Comment

EDITORIALS IN PICTURES AND IN PRINT

The familiar mushroom of an A-bomb explosion. While we rightly fear this dreadful weapon, it serves as a deterrent against a Red invasion and the carnage of war.

Johnnie Ritch of Bremerton, Washington, won a bieyele for collecting most shoes for Korean Relief (1,325 pairs). In a spirit of charity he even offered his bieyele to Relief.

THERE is much agitation these days both for tax reduction and tax reform. Yet it would be folly to expect any important decline in taxes, so long as federal expenses

Battle of the Taxes remain near the seventy billion dollar level. We cannot go on indefinitely piling up deficits and adding to the federal debt. The sooner we balance the budget and start reducing the debt, the better.

If budget cuts permit tax cuts, so much the better. But any sizable reduction in budget, and taxes, must await real peace in the world. Even cease-fire or a final peace in Korea would not be enough. Until we have world disarmament, we dare not retrench too much on our defense efforts. Substantial tax reduction today is a problem for the Department of State, not the Treasury.

But if the Treasury dare not take the initiative on lowering taxes, it can and should take the first steps toward tax reform. Students of taxes agree that the federal-state-local tax picture is a hodgepodge.

Two areas of reform may be singled out as especially important. First there is the overlapping of federal, state, and even local taxes of the same type. We have federal and state gasoline taxes. There are state and local property taxes, Some persons pay city, state, and federal income taxes. The burden of keeping records and making reports for these multiple taxes, whether on individuals or business firms, is becoming increasingly heavy.

We might cite the example of the state income tax. In most areas this tax is light, compared to the federal levy. For many persons the toll is less than five dollars. Yet such persons may need to spend several hours preparing a separate state form, paying more in lost time than they do in taxes. Even worse is the multiplicity of business taxes, which often lead to a formidable accounting and bookkeeping problem.

We could seek compacts among the governmental units reserving certain types of taxes exclusively to one level. Thus the federal government might ask a monopoly on income taxes, in return for giving up gasoline taxes. The states might reserve sales taxes and give up property taxes.

A second area of reform involves the social costs of taxes. Taxes at present levels have a powerful effect on business size, methods, and prospects. Most of these taxes were imposed for revenue alone, with little thought given to their side effects. Yet these effects may change the whole pattern of American business in two generations. It is argued, for example, that extremely high individual income taxes are forcing concentration in American business. Small business firms sell out to corporations, so that the proprietors can take profits in the form of capital gains, rather than as regular income. Persons with savings put them into risk-free government bonds rather than new enterprises.

The result is that American business expands largely by "making the big ones bigger." Corporations rather than in-

June, 1953

HE SIGN

0 n

rot ne ck

ng

lds

inolf,

It

un-

ing

ust

has von

and

Go

not ove-

2.

This picture symbolizes the strife in Italy. With insufficient land for its millions, Italy has the problems of food and work. Reds are capitalizing on the difficulties.

Two little boys in the Belgian Congo receive their first ration of milk provided by UNICEF. Dietary deficiencies cause swollen stomachs and also ugly skin blemishes.

dividuals take the risks involved in starting new businesses. Even corporations must borrow money, rather than invest profits or sell stock. This builds up a burden of debt which makes them highly vulnerable to a depression. Debt payments must go on, whether profits come in or not. Thus, our tax "policy" is leading us toward a highly centralized economy, which may collapse under a strong business recession. If we do not like these trends, we must change the tax policies which favor them. It may not be easy to work out new laws, but dare we continue with the present ones?

WO Yale scientists, José Delgado and H. Enger Rosvold, Two Yale scientists, Jose Deigano and Publicity. In a have received widespread and deserved publicity. In a monkey's brain, they planted a set of multiple electrodes.

Conditioned Reflexes In Zoo and State

By sending current through various of the paired contact points, they control the physical and emotional behavior of the subject. At will, they can make him wink, yawn, snarl, or just sit and moon. It makes no difference whether the monkey is lunching on bananas, studying the faces outside his cage, swinging on his trapeze, or otherwise diverting himself. The scientist can quiet him down, rouse him up, put him through a winking routine, or make him scratch his back. All by one little shot of elec-

News of this interesting experiment was released at a moment when, for about the twentieth time, Soviet geopoliticians were conducting the same kind of experiment on Western statesmen-without benefit of any brain implantation or electric shock.

The new Soviet dictator had sent the West into a flurry of collective apprehension, anger, and defense-thinking. First, by the sinister reputation which he brought to his job. Secondly, by having his MIG's knock a few Allied planes out of the sky over the eastern margin of Allied occupation territory, in Europe.

Like a good artist, Georgi was apparently working up contrast-providing a low-key background for something white which he wanted to flash on the international scene. The something white was a dove, inviting the West to sit down with him sensibly and kiss away all the nasty tensions which had been chafing us.

Sure enough, it worked. Rumors came out of Washington, rumors which were interpreted as planned news leaks or trial balloons. The Administration was considering scissoring off part of Northern Korea and officially deeding it over to local representatives of the Soviet Presidium. It was also considering taking Formosa from the Formosans, handing it over to the questionable mercies of the U. N., and ditching Chiang Kai-Shek.

European NATO representatives, at their meeting in Paris, promptly forgot the urgent fervor sparked by the shock of the air incidents and were back at their slowdown tactics.

In Britain, MP's scorched Gen. Clark for bribing Red airmen to desert to our side and bring a late edition MIG with them. It seems, some of the Parliamentarians thought such conduct would be immoral in a Red flier and would tempt the Soviet to reconsider its peaceable intentions.

MAYBE the Washington rumors weren't trial balloons. Maybe the European NATO nations suffer prohibitively under the double burden of economic reconstruction and rearmament. Maybe some MP's do have unusual scruples Go By the of conscience. There is no Record Book "maybe" about what the mysterious guiding genius of Soviet diplomatic strategy did to Western diplomats (at least, some of them). He did what the Yale biologists do with their less literate subject. He made them kick, blink, and then lie down and roll over.

THE SIGN

Like the Doctors in New Haven, he seems to be able to do it every time and by the same old method. But unlike them, he can do it without planting an electrode in the subjects' skulls or wasting a milliwatt of current.

All is not lost, though—yet. The monkey at Yale may look no more pathetic than certain diplomats. But he is. He is never going to find out what's wrong with him, why the sudden appetite for bananas or the irresistible urge to scratch.

The diplomat can save himself. He has at hand his history book and his arithmetic. In the history book, he can read that peace and truce offensives have been tried before. They have always damaged our position because they have always lowered our guard and gummed up the wheels of rearmament.

The arithmetic will remind him of the profound fact that two and two make four.

Simple lessons. Not simple enough for the wired monkey at Yale. But, fortunately, simple enough for any diplomat who really tries.

THE problem of guilt has been a block in the mind of man since the dawn of creation. No sufficient, effective, and complete solution for this problem can omit a therapy

Sound Medicine for Sick Minds

ses.

vest

ich oaynus,

ized

eces-

the

vork

nes?

vold.

In a odes.

varioints,

and subdif-

study-

e. or him

ne, or elec-

at a politi-nt on olantaflurry

nking.

is job.

planes

pation

ip con-

white

. The

down

which ashing-

s leaks

ng scisding it

um. It

mosans,

U. N.,

ting in ne shock

tactics.

Red air-

on MIG

thought d would balloons.

prohibi-

struction be some scruples

is no

the mys-

of Soviet ast, some

E SIGN

ons.

instituted by Christ Himself. It is the sacramental therapy of Penance in which, through the confession and contrition of a penitent and the efficacious absolution of a priest, the soul of a man is cleansed, his punishment abated, and a sound basis established for peace of soul.

For the second time within a year, Our Holy Father has found it necessary to call our attention to the proper role of clinical psychology and psychotherapy in dealing with man as a whole being. Psychiatrists cannot, without grave harm, forget the nature of man or the function of religion if they wish to act in accordance with sound science in the practical field.

The Pope commemorated "the truths established by reason and by faith and the obligatory precepts of ethics." He warned psychiatrists to consider man: 1) as a psychic unit and a totality, whose free will, although impaired by original sin and disorders that disturb the normal functioning of the psychic being, is still able to adhere to God's law. Moreover, his moral struggle to follow the right path does not argue that it is impossible for him to do this nor justify any scientist in withdrawing his patient from it. 2) as a structural unit, for man is an ordered individual whose essential structure, as created by God, does not disappear when individual notes or casual difficulties are added to it. Therefore psychology must deal with man as such, and not lay down a new set of principles for each man in the concrete. Laws for man are to be applied to individuals, not invented for them. 3) as a social unit, whose personal inhibitions cannot be indulged in aberrations to the detriment of society, but in whom self-mastery and religious discipline must be built up. 4) as a transcendent unit, whose first responsibility is to show respect for God and His Holiness in all his conscious

Thus psychology as a science is capable, as the Pope insists, of achieving precious results for medicine, for the knowledge of the soul in general, for the religious dispositions of man in general, and for their development.

In the past, some proponents of psychiatry have tried to

Harris & Ewina

Former FBI agent, Herbert Philbrick, says that eight clergymen were in Boston's elite Communist group. We wonder how these Men of God reconcile Christianity with Atheism.

A rare occasion at the U.N. Russia and the West agree on armistice talks in Korea. However, this probably means transferring speeches from New York to Panmunjom.

Wide World photos

Rev. Dennis Comey, S.J., is acclaimed by longshoremen after settling labor dispute in Philadelphia. Another instance of the great work in Labor of the Jesuit Fathers.

June, 1953

Upienski Cathedral in Moscow. In bygone days the Czars were crowned here. With all their faults they believed in God. Today, Godless dictators have taken their place.

A very young Red Chinese soldier and a hard-bitten veteran are ready to be returned in prisoner exchange at Panmunjom. Neither seems too happy about going home again.

Another Madonna for the Eternal City. A forty-foot bronze statue of Our Lady has been completed. Romans can look toward Monte Mario and behold their Patroness. make it a substitute for Christianity. More recently some have tried to make it coextensive with Christianity. The Supreme Pontiff declares that it is neither. He establishes the principle that a conscious action which is a deviation from the Divine Law cannot be sanctioned by any science. He promises his blessing and interest to this important science which can and ought to serve the interests of all men, but only as a means to their eternal destiny and responsibility to God.

The conclusions are clear: The priest may and ought to co-operate with the psychologist. No priest, however, should recommend a therapist who considers religion an illusion or who does not follow the orientation laid down by the Holy Father.

Therapy of the mind and the care of the soul, instead of excluding one another, should complement each other. For a proper collaboration between priest and psychologist, the priest ought to follow the mind of the Pope and have sufficient knowledge and appreciation of psychotherapy. The psychologist in turn must understand the patients' moral needs lest he do more harm than good and turn his healing art into material co-operation in evil.

WE happened to be leafing through the pages of the World Almanac the other day and decided to total up some figures about the free and the slave world and see what the balance sheet would look like. Here's the way it came out: Population-North Atlantic alliance and associates-779,400,-000; Soviet bloc - 750,000,000; neutrals-870,600,000; world total-2,400,000,000.

The Sunny Side of the Street

Despite all we hear about China's teeming millions and Russia's superabundant manpower, the free world is not outnumbered by its enemies. It has an edge of perhaps several million people over the Soviet bloc.

Of course, mere numbers don't spell victory in wars, cold or hot. But one thing that does mean a lot in a hot warif we ever come to that-is the ability to produce steel. The North Atlantic Treaty countries alone are producing about four times as many tons of steel a year as the Soviet Union hopes to produce in 1955 under the current Five-Year Plan. The United States alone produced over twice as much in 1951 as the U.S.S.R. may produce in 1955-and that goes not only for steel but for total production of everything.

The population figure, striking as it is, really tells only a small part of the story. The further you go into it, the less reason there is for discouragement.

There is the strength, population-wise, of the neutrals-870,600,000. The neutrals do outnumber us, but production figures don't follow along. The free nations far outstrip the neutrals in industry of all sorts. What the population figure does show is that it would be perilous to our side if the neutrals were to cast their lot with the Soviet Union. The law of survival dictates that we take steps, diplomatic and economic, to keep them out of the other camp.

Another thought our figures lead to is this: the comfortable total for the free world doesn't come from the United States alone. It represents the United States plus some thirty or forty allies, big and small. Take a few of them away and we obviously can't get the same totals out of what is left. This goes for population, production, and natural resources. It takes all forty of us to make the powerful force for freedom that we are.

This makes us question the wisdom of those patriots who want to see America go it alone. Allies are a basic necessity in the defense of freedom-not a luxury that can be dispensed with at will, the way, for instance, you tighten your belt during Lent.

Hollywood's Nice Girl

What makes a Hollywood actress? Can a nice girl make it and stay that way? Ann Blyth has won a unique place in Movieland on her own

by JERRY COTTER

NN Blyth has unconsciously ruined A a former Hollywood wisecrack. Nowadays when the Beverly Hills set refers to Ann as a "nice girl," the old-time opprobrium connected with the words has been replaced by admiration. I believe it was Mark Stevens who said, "If anyone in Hollywood ever got fresh with Ann, he'd be run out of town." If she never accomplished anything else by her presence in movieville, this rebuff to cynicism would be enough.

Dressed in impeccable taste, not designed to startle the eye of the beholder, screne Ann Blyth scarcely resembles the popular conception of a top-bracket movie star. At twenty-five, with two decades in the highly competitive acting profession behind her, Ann is a poised and candid young lady who knows what she wants-and why.

The Irish-blue of her eyes sparkled as she talked about the things most dear to her: Faith, family, and career. Her devotion to all three has become almost legendary in the ten years since she arrived in Hollywood. An attractive St. Genesius medal dangled from her wrist, occasionally accenting a Blyth remark by clinking against the teacup she held.

Ann is practical about her career. "Hard work, and not publicity, is what makes an actress a success, and don't let anyone tell you otherwise."

Beauty, proven dramatic ability, and determination are the usual requisites

Dr. James McNulty and his bride-to-be, Ann Marie Blyth for screen stardom. Ann has these in abundant measure. She is probably the most sought-after young star in motion pictures today.

More important, she has the Faith and strength of character which enable her to sift the nuggets from the sand in the Hollywood sluice trough. Few girls her age are as fortunate. In a field where sincerity, innate dignity, and honesty do not always win top priority, Ann Blyth has proved that glamour is a highly overrated commodity unless it has a firm basis in these

With the exception of Irene Dunne,

no star in Hollywood today is more honestly admired and respected by fellow workers than this soft-spoken young lady who has come to material success via the long, hard route.

Ann knows about hard work. She started at the age of five, acting in radio plays, singing children's roles with the San Carlo Opera, and studying voice and dramatics. All this continued while she went through the usual 3-R training at two New York parochial schools, St. Stephen's and St. Patrick's Cathedral School. "I love California now, but New York is really my home town," Ann reminisced, "even though it wasn't

June, 1953

be dis ten your E SIGN

The hes ion nce. tant all ret to ould

sion the d of , the suf-The noral

aling

f the al up what

look e out: ic al-9,400,-00,000;

is and ot out-

several

s. cold

l. The

about

Union

ve-Year

s much

at goes only a

the less eutrals-duction

trip the n figure

e if the

n. The atic and fortable

ed States

hirty or way and t is left.

esources.

for free-iots who necessity

hing.

XUM

always very pleasant for me being here."

Ann's parents separated shortly after she was born in 1928. Her mother, the former Ann Lynch of Dublin, struggled hard in those early depression years to keep a home for her two daughters, Ann and Dorothy. When young Ann showed an aptitude and a desire to act and sing, her mother, who had come from a "family of Dublin story-tellers," encouraged her.

"One day while I was eating lunch at school," recalled Ann, "a producer came around to look the class over. This was the Professional Children's School and most of us were working in radio and on the stage. The producer was Herman Shumlin. He picked me from the group. Next thing I realized I was rehearsing with Paul Lukas for a Broadway debut in Watch on the Rhine. I was eleven and had never been happier." That play, and Ann, were both successful. She appeared in it almost two years, was signed by Universal-International when a talent scout turned in an enthusiastic report on her, and wound up playing in a series of movie musicals.

MORE serious screen roles, an Academy Award nomination for her performance in Mildred Pierce, and two personal tragedies followed. Playing Joan Crawford's daughter was a radical departure of type for the hitherto sweet ingenue of the O'Connor comedies. She was called on to interpret a selfish, snarling, and thoroughly unsympathetic subdeb.

It is a tribute to her ability that her best efforts have been in roles calling for the unattractive character qualities which she does not possess. In Thunder on the Hill, she lent great conviction to the part of a condemned murderess. Fans seem to prefer her assignments as the "campus sweetheart" or "the girl next door," such as she played in Sally and Saint Anne-but the critic's garlands have come with the unattractive roles. Under a new MGM starring contract, she will probably alternate both styles with singing assignments in pictures like Indian Love Call and The Student Prince.

The first joy of star billing was marred considerably for the happy young girl by the death of her mother, who had guided her through every step of her career. "The blow was softened a great deal when my mother's sister and her husband closed their own home in Connecticut and came to live with me. I don't know what I would have done without Aunt Cis and Uncle Pat. They're wonderful."

Tragedy rode tandem at that period for Ann. She had been tobogganing with friends in the San Bernadinos, when she was thrown from the sled. "Some of the doctors said I would never walk again. I had a broken back and spent the next year and a half wearing first a cast and then a steel brace. It looked like the end of movies for me."

"At a time like that, you really learn the power of prayer and the solace it brings," she added. "I guess we all need reminders. I have a daily one in a little shrine I've made at home. It's a small one, dedicated to Our Lady,"

June Haver once told me that of all the people she had met during her movie career, Ann impressed her most. "She's lively and gay, without any affectation at all. She is like a breath of fresh ocean air. And her Faith is as much a part of her as breathing," enthused June.

As June Haver so aptly expressed it, Ann's Faith seems to be as much a part of her life as breathing. Certainly the record of her participation in religious functions, or for charity, is second to none.

It isn't often that stars make it a point to tell interviewers the good points of co-workers and competitors. Ann is one of the refreshing exceptions.

The mercurial and oft-maligned Mario Lanza, with whom she was to co-star in The Student Prince, probably has his most ardent sympathizer in the girl he left waiting at the camera. While others might gripe over being deprived of an important role in a big picture, Ann is more interested in helping Lanza if she can.

Ann has announced that she will be married June 12th to Dr. James McNulty, brother of another Hollywood luminary, Dennis Day. We can imagine that there will be many a chorus of "Tralee" and "Galway Bay" ringing out over the San Fernando Valley where California Conquistadors once roamed, when the McNultys, the Days, the Tobins, and the Blyths convene. It will probably remind Ann of those poverty-ridden days on Manhattan's East Side when her mother took in washing to pay for Ann's voice lessons, and Ann stood in the backyard singing tear-drenched Irish ballads to earn pennies for a binge at the corner candy store.

Ann Marie Blyth has come a long way since then. She has traveled far and risen high, without distorting the pattern of the early days. She is a contradiction of so many pseudo-traditions in movieville, we can only hope that she is the harbinger of a trend.

Top: Ann poses with Cardinal McIntyre of Los Angeles Center: Varied acting roles show Ann Blyth's talent Bottom: Unspoiled Ann can cook and be happy at home

The Anointing of the Queen

Coronation 1066

Coronation 1953

by ANDREW BOYLE

IT is one of the stranger ironies of history that England—now only a nominally Christian land—should have preserved in the Coronation Rite of her sovereigns one of the most distinctively Catholic ceremonies left in the Protestant West. On June 2 of this year, for the first time in twelve centuries, millions of loyal Britons will follow the main parts of the glittering, impressive "sacring" of the young Queen Elizabeth the Second on their television screens. They will be united in spirit with the select congregation of Lords, Commons, ecclesiastical dignitaries, and delegates of Commonwealth and other nations beneath the soaring arches of Westminster Abbey, the witnesses and passive participants of a religious drama whose outward forms have altered little since William the Conqueror was crowned there on Christmas Day, 1066.

The actual place of coronation, therefore, has nearly nine hundred years of history behind it, but the ritual is older still: so ancient indeed that the origins of certain elements are buried in legend and popular myth. The great Abbey Church was specially designed by the last Saxon king, St. Edward the Confessor, for the magnificence of the coronation ceremonial. The Second

SIGN June, 1953

Elizabeth will be the twenty-eighth monarch to be crowned there, ten others having been anointed and enthroned elsewhere in Westminster. Only two other great shrines in Europe, St. Peter's in Rome and the Cathedral of Rheims, can claim so close an association with the consecration of heads of Church and State; but the Abbey is five hundred years older than the present Vatican Basilica, and the Gothic splendor of Rheims no longer echoes to the silver tongues of France's coronation trumpets.

If we could reverse Mark Twain's amusing process, and instead of spiriting a Yankee to King Arthur's Court somehow bring a Saxon courtier to modern Westminster, it is probable that the visitor would be familiar with much of the ceremony.

In the Middle Ages, four slightly varying forms of the coronation ceremony were followed. They were the outcome of successive revisions carried out to harmonize the service with the changing needs of the time. But it is to St. Dunstan and a handful of unrecorded Saxon theologians before him that England owes the main structure of the beautiful and elaborate Coronation Rite. We might expect our Saxon visitor to the 1953 ceremony to recognize in the Oath; the Anointing; the Investiture with ring, sword, crown, scepter, and rod; the Enthronement and the Homage a ceremony fuller and more imposing but nonetheless similar to that which made Edgar king nearly a thousand years ago.

Queen Elizabeth the First was the last English sovereign to be crowned during Mass, in conformity with the Catholic rite by which saintly rulers like Edward the Confessor and Edmund the Martyr had been crowned. As at the Coronation of her staunchly Catholic half-sister, Mary Tudor, six years previously, in 1553, the Archbishop of Canterbury did not officiate, though it was his right and privilege to do so. In each case a Catholic Bishop still in communion with the Holy See had to be summoned to pontificate. The First Elizabeth is alleged to have complained that the anointing oil "was grease and smelt ill"; and there are those who assert that she deliberately withdrew from sight behind the high altar during Mass so as to avoid being at the Elevation.

Whether that is so or not, the reign of Elizabeth definitely marked the end of a historical epoch as far as religion was concerned. When she died, and the morose Scot, James I, ascended the throne in her place, his Coronation service was solemnized in the vernacular, "under reformed conditions." Scores of "priests and laymen had already been martyred for saying or assisting at Mass; the old superstitious "mumbo-jumbo of Rome" had been banished.

THIS fourth revision of the Coronait eliminated the Mass while straining to recapture the liturgical richness of Litlyngton's fourteenth-century rite enshrined in his Liber Regalis. Oddly enough, Archbishop Whitgift succeeded admirably in adapting the badly mutilated ceremony to the "needs" of the new religion. Unfortunately, James II, whose brief and troubled reign began in 1685, broke the fresh, reformed pattern by becoming a Catholic and by insisting on an abridged version of the Rite. To the fury of future Anglican liturgists, this monarch caused the Communion Service to be omitted altogether and softened down the essential "sacring" part of the service.

It was undoubtedly partly due to the blunt, undiplomatic Catholic outlook of James II that changes were made for the "double crowning" of William and Mary, the usurpers, just four years later. The two principal alterations which Catholics have since had reason to dis-

Instruments for use in the Coronation ceremony. Birdshaped oil stock and anointing spoon. Head of royal sceptre. Orbs symbolizing the power of the Queen

The Royal Family: Queen Elizabeth, Duke of Edinburgh, Prince Charles, Princess Anne

Left: Actual crown for ceremony, St. Edward's. Right: Imperial state crown for other functions like were the recasting of the Oath to insure that "the Protestant Religion Established by Law is maintained" and the reintegration of the crowning with the reformers' "Communion Service."

12

THE SIGN

ar.

of een

ass:

ode

nance

ing

of enldly

ded

uti-

the

II,

be-med

d by

the lican

the altossen-

the the tlook

e for

and later.

which

o dis-

Anne

Bearing in mind that the Church of England has tampered irretrievably with the foundations of Christian Truth, and that every rite and ceremony has therefore been distorted, one cannot help marveling that so many prayers and rubrics dating from England's original Catholic heritage should linger intact in the modern Coronation Ordo. First, the opening act of Recognition, when the unanointed Queen is presented by the Archbishop of Canterbury to the assembled prelates, nobles, and people.

THEN comes the Litany of the Saints, intoned by two Bishops, once a prelude to the Mass of Consecration.

The bare, anglicized Introit, Collect, Epistle, Gospel, and Sermon have a limited appeal today. This first portion of the official "Communion Service" precedes the Oath-taking and Anointing; and it is a dismal commentary on the shrinking religious sense of the British people that the pageantry now counts for more than its inner significance. To the average spectator, whether nominal Anglican or non-Conformist, the "Communion Service" must appear a tedious method of lengthening the ceremony.

Probably only a minority of Britons realize that the solemn act of sacring the Queen, setting her apart for her grave responsibilities, and invoking the Holy Ghost to guide and strengthen her, is a survival from medieval and Saxon Catholicism. For the hallowing of the sovereign by anointing with oil and chrism, instead of by the imposition of hands, is the real heart of the Rite.

Oil, the symbol of light and heat, representing the outpouring of the gifts of the Holy Ghost, seals the special character of the sovereign as mediator before God between clergy and people. But its age-old use at coronations does not signify, as some wishful Anglican experts suggest, that the sovereign is thereby invested with a peculiar priestly character, like a Bishop. The earliest form of the Anglo-Saxon enthroning rubric makes unmistakably clear that the monarch does not become a "mixed person" in the theological sense, that is, one who is both layman and cleric. It says rather cuttingly: "Inasmuch as you see the clergy standing closer to the holy altar than yourself, be therefore all the more mindful to render to them an honor more exalted in the place that belongs to them."

As a script writer for the B.B.C., his name is also familiar to English radio listeners.

ANDREW BOYLE is a well-known feature writer for the Catholic Herald of London.

The overwhelming mass of Britons will instinctively find their deepest emotional satisfaction in the placing of the Crown on her head. Without any doubt, this is by far the most spectacular moment of all, when the tense silence of expectancy is broken, the Abbey reverberates with loud acclamations, the peers put on their coronets, and the bells and guns send their message of joy and triumph across the capital and country. Only the pride of a handful of Scots will be placated by the presentation of the Bible-"the most valuable thing which this world affords"-when the Scottish Moderator will, for the first time, take his place in the Abbey by the side of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Only the peers and nobles, including the Duke of Edinburgh who is to lead their delegates in line, will know a personal thrill when allegiance is sworn to the Queen at the Homage. And it is mainly because the Mass no longer matters in secularized England that the remainder of the "Communion Service," taking in the reception by the Queen of the purely commemorative bread and wine and her offering of gold to God, is likely to strike the multitude as a pious anti-climax.

Viewed in its entirety, the English Coronation Service is an extraordinarily well-preserved relic of the heyday of Christian civilization, when kings held the highest power and authority under God for the temporal welfare of their people. It can hardly be said to reflect the existing political or religious order in modern England and the British Commonwealth; yet the British genius for practical political compromise has lent the Crown an unparalleled symbolical dignity.

IN a world that is rapidly learning the disastrous results of shutting out the grace of God, of turning its back on truth. justice, and goodness, a British monarch who devotes herself selflessly to the formal duties of her constitutional role must stand out like a pillar of stability and graciousness.

As a godly Christian, rather than as the Titular Head of the Established Church of England, Queen Elizabeth will humbly ask for the guidance and strength of heaven to fulfill her unenviable mission in life when she enters Westminster Abbey for her crowning. That is how even the most pagan Briton will see her on June 2; and that is why even the most historically sensitive British Catholic will pray hard and feel protoundly for her in the hour of her "sacring."

June, 1953

13

E SIGN

Photos by H. Armstrong Roberts and Harold Lambert

▲ Sophistication of youth deceives parents and even barkeeps

Many drinking parties begin as a lark but end up in tragedy ▶

Our Teen-Age Drinkers

Who is to blame for American teen-age drinking?

The facts are staggering as well as our youth—statistically, 39% of our boys and 19% of our girls drink

by MILTON LOMASK

ABOUT eight in the evening, 16-year-old Jimmy popped into the living room to tell his folks not to wait up for him and to listen, with more patience than interest, to Dad's customary lecture on the do's and don't's of piloting the family vehicle. Then in his best suit Jimmy went to pick up his best girl and squire her to one of the big events of his high school year. the Sophomore Class dance. An hour and a half later he returned, looking a little down at the mouth and muttering something about his date having a headache. Next morning the truth came out. "Betty and I called it quits," he told his mother, "because the party just wasn't any fun. Most of the kids were drunk."

A true story? Yes. It happened in a medium-sized industrial town not far from the writer's home.

A typical story? That question is plaguing many adults as the evidence accumulates that American teen-agers are hitting the bottle harder, or at any rate in a more spectacular manner, than any previous generation.

"It is my impression," says the Honorable Stanley P. Mead, one of the judges of the Juvenile Court for the State of Connecticut, "that a lot of youngsters are functioning under the fatal illusion that they can have their high spirits and consume them too."

A few years ago Yale sociologist August B. Hollingshead made an intensive study of teen-age life in a Midwestern town of 10,000. He found that 39 per cent of the boys and 19 per cent of the girls were drinking. Only slightly lower percentages appear in a recent study of three high school groups in the Buffalo, N. Y., area by Dr. Dwight Monnier, executive secretary of the Western New York Committee for Education on Alcoholism, Inc. Other surveys, here and there around the country, yield much the same information.

Figures alone, of course, tell little. They merely raise questions: What is the nature and what are the probable causes of this drinking, and what is being done about it?

In search for answers, this writer visited three East Coast towns, button-holed half a dozen recognized authorities, and examined some of the literature issued as part of a new educational approach to the problem now being undertaken by some public school systems in 40 states.

Call the first of the towns visited "Suburbia," a relatively wealthy community of 50,000 on the outskirts of New York City. Here I talked to a high school principal who said "the drinking among our students is negligible," to a member of his school board who said it was "catastrophic," to a woman in charge of a large girls club, to the secretary of the superintendent of police, and to the officer in charge of the police vice squad.

ALL except the principal called the situation disturbing. According to the girls' club leader, Suburbia's junior misses are still throwing those "crash" parties that were the headlines and scourge of many communities a few years ago. Some girls get together in one of their homes. Sometimes Mama and Papa are hovering about, sometimes not. The girls lay in a store of food, about three times what they need. Then they wait. Soon groups of boys come along and "crash." With the boys comes the stuff-that-cheers.

Two informants referred me to the local newspaper office where I found a dozen clippings chronicling an oftentold tale: Two boys and a high-powered car, plus two girls picked up on the street, plus a bottle of hootch, plus a tour of the neon-lighted highways feeding into town. Prognosis: Tragic. In this particular incident, one of the girls was killed, one of the boys maimed for life.

One of the newspaper accounts said the community was "profoundly shocked."

"Gratifying how quickly everyone got over it," was the dry comment of one of the police officers.

Call the second community visited "Mid-town": 30,000 people, most of them members of the medium-income, white-collar class. Here I talked to the High School principal and the High School guidance director.

"In the old days," said the principal, "we threw open our high school parties MILTON LOMASK, former reporter for the New York Journal-American and other papers, is now a full-time freelance writer. He has written for many leading magazines.

to youngsters from the nearby city. No more. The only way we can control this thing is by restricting high school affairs to members of our own school and their guests. Occasionally, even so, a lad slips in with a bottle. When we discover it, out he goes.

"We can regulate school affairs," he went on, "but we can't touch these little outside groups the kids form among themselves. In some of those organizations, the ability to drink is a requirement of membership."

Said the guidance director, drawing on more than two decades in educational work: "A lot of this goes back to the overemphasis American parents put on material things. We see many homes where the mother works not because she has to, but because, as she puts it, she wants to buy more things for her children. What she buys them in the long run is unhappiness. That doesn't necessarily drive a child to drinking, but it does make him vulnerable to the social pressures that do."

Call the third community what its impressive skyline of belching smokestacks proclaims it to be: "Industrial City." Here my chief informants were a priest in charge of a large CYO, some teen-agers from both the public and Catholic high schools, and a newspaper

The situation? Equally as serious as in the other towns, aggravated by the fact that in some areas of Industrial City the living conditions, according to the priest, "are the worst I've ever seen and before I came here, I worked in the slums of Brooklyn." The youngsters told hair-raising tales, principally about drinking at football victory celebrations and the overly lenient attitudes of some parents.

The newspaper man took me on a guided tour of the Main Street bistros. In one, he informed the bartender that some of his paying customers were under age. The bartender looked at him with admiration. "I got to hand it to you, Bill," he said, "you got good eyes. Now me, I can't tell the kids from the grownups anymore, the kids are so doggone sophisticated."

All the people talked to both in these towns and elsewhere were asked to express their opinions as to why drinking among the younger set has reached its present proportions.

They suggested many factors. One, mentioned frequently, was "parental indifference." In Suburbia, the school board member spoke of being told by a father of three high school boys, "what

Good company is still the best remedy

H. Armstrong Roberts photo Teen-agers must learn to enjoy becoming amusements

my kids do about drinking is none of my business. Mother and I live our lives. We feel the youngsters have a right to live theirs." In Industrial City the priest spoke of talking with parents who regarded their children's drinking as a "lark." He spoke of going down Main Street "at 11 or 12 at night" and seeing boys from the parish hanging around the local taverns.

"There's no point asking them why they're not home," he said, "because I know why. Mama works all day, Papa all night. Come the end of the week, Papa pays his bills and keeps the rest of his wages for what he calls 'spending money.' Mama does the same. No sharing of money, no sharing of effort, no sharing of worry about the children—in short, no home!"

IN a six-month period beginning with August, 1952, the Connecticut Liquor Control Commission held 60 hearings relative to sales of alcoholic beverages to minors. All youngsters involved are required to testify. Said John C. Kelly, the Commission Chairman:

"I believe if a kid of mine had to attend one of these hearings, I'd be there with him. That isn't what happens. These youngsters come trooping in alone. Seldom are their parents interested enough to come along."

Another factor, in the words of one of the persons questioned, is "that kids have this drinking thing in front of them all the time." They do indeed. It is estimated that 65 million American adults consume alcoholic beverages to some extent.

There is nothing new, of course, about people drinking. They've been doing it ever since back in the dawn of things when someone discovered what you can accomplish by crushing a grape or putting your heel to a grain of corn.

What is strikingly new about drinking in America is the importance so many people now attach to it. In many circles it is no longer regarded as merely one of the trimmings of social and business life, but as their maintay. To increasing numbers, it has become closely associated with success and prestige and glamour.

These attitudes—the attitudes of their elders—hover over the teen-ager like the atom bomb. Consequently he is confronted at an early age with a question that seldom troubled members of my generation until adulthood, namely, "Shall I drink, and if so how much?"

In the last decade or so, scientists and sociologists have been trying to discover what this drinking problem is all about. Researches have been undertaken at such places as the Yale Center for Alcoholic Studies, the University of Buffalo Information and Rehabilitation Center, and the Raleigh Hills Sanatorium in Oregon. They have produced a sizeable body of facts and theories, and some of these have been made available to the public in books and in readable and inexpensive pamphlets on the order of Raymond G. McCarthy's Life Adjustment Booklet, Facts About Alcohol.

One outcome has been the introduction into some public school systems of the new educational approach previously mentioned. Every state requires that school children receive some instruction about alcohol, and in the old days the system in most communities was to subject the youngsters from time to time to so-called "temperance" lectures.

In a doctoral thesis covering an educational experiment in three Buffalo high schools, the Dr. Monnier previously referred to recalls some elements of this system. School children were told that if they drank too much they might lose their minds or get cancer. The writer recalls hearing a temperance talk in his own early days. After inventorying the dire probabilities, the speaker polished off his remarks by plumping a dog's liver into a bottle of alcohol. The liver blushed and the students gasped. By which I mean we were supposed to gasp. Unless my memory is extremely faulty, most of us sensed that the speaker was pulling our leg.

MODERN science has put its imprimatur on our guess. Our leg was being pulled. Today's specialists have opened a window on the problem. They have thrown out this old poppycock and let the fresh air of knowledge sweep in. As a result, the literature produced as part of the new educational approach contains a great deal of information likely to be of immense value to its readers.

By no means all of the concepts presented, however, are Caesar's wives. One, in particular, is open to question.

THE SIGN

Connecticut courts check minors

In the literature of the "new approach," drinking is described as a medical, social, and psychological problem. Impressive evidence supports this, and also supports two of the conclusions drawn from it, namely, that more medical facilities should be placed at the disposal of alcoholics and that youngsters should be trained to look for indications of alcoholism in themselves. But nothing is said to indicate that drinking is also and primarily a moral problem, and some leaders of the new movement say emphatically that it is not.

AUTHORITIES consulted offer several explanations for this. One is that the old temperance-lecture program was a moral approach and that it failed. The question of whether it failed or not must be passed over, because there is no conclusive evidence one way or the other. The temperance-lecture system was undoubtedly incorrect—but not because it was moral, but because it was ignorant.

Another explanation is that the most serious kind of drinker, the alcoholic, is a sick person and is therefore not morally accountable for his drinking. This may or may not be true, but in either event it scarcely explains why a program directed at young people—most of whom are doing no drinking at all—should omit mention of the elementary fact that drinking is a moral problem, a problem of decision, of choosing between alternatives which by any other name are still rightdoing on the one hand and wrongdoing on the other.

Still another explanation belongs to that category of things that Alice in Wonderland described as "curiouser and curiouser." It was put to the writer by a prominent woman in the field, more or less in these words:

"Our objective, of course, is to bring our program to the attention of those who need it most, the alcoholics. People like that would shun us if we told them drinking is a moral problem. As a matter of fact, I think most Americans are afraid of the word 'moral.' They always think of it as meaning 'immoral!'"

The failure to put proper emphasis on the moral aspects of drinking is obviously out of place in a program which claims to be scientific. The first step in the scientific search for a solution to any problem is to define the nature of the problem as correctly and fully as possible. The emphatic statement of some leaders of the program that drinking is not a moral issue is certainly out of place in a program which claims to be "neutral" about such matters. There is nothing morally neutral about a flat statement that drinking is not a moral issue.

This deficiency in the new literature does not erase the value of its sounder aspects. They can and are being put to good use. This is demonstrated by the appearance on Catholic Church racks of the booklet Shall I Start to Drinh? by the Rev. John C. Ford, S.J., author of the article on "Alcoholism" in Supplement II of the Catholic Encyclopedia. Father Ford, in this readable and invigorating pamphlet. combines many of the sound data of the New Approach with Christian principles, and does it in a way which shows clearly that the data and the principles are not at odds, but are supportive of one another. Perhaps a few of Father Ford's words placed here may serve as a pleasant period to an otherwise depressing report:

"One of the decisions," he writes, "they (young people) have to make is what their attitude should be with regard to drinking . . And in the confused social scene that surrounds them . . . it is only too likely that their decision . . . will not be a real decision at all. They will simply drift with whichever current is stronger, or allow themselves to be led by emotion, or by human respect, or by expediency, or by mere pleasure-seeking and thrill-seeking, instead of by reason and Faith, and by principles based on reason and Faith. . . .

"I HAVE said the virtue of sobriety forbids as sinful only the abuse of alcohol. One who drinks in moderation, therefore, may well be practicing the virtue . . . If this is so . . . where does total abstinence fit into the picture?

"You are the followers of Christ. He is a crucified Christ. He came on earth to show us how to live . . . And as a way of living He taught us the supernatural value of self-denial . . . The call which Our Lord sends forth to us . . . is not merely a call to avoid what is sinful; He calls us to be perfect as our heavenly Father is perfect."

June, 1953

of

re-

ires

in-old ties

ime

ice"

edu-falo

pre-ents told night

The

talk

toryeaker

ing a

The

sped.

posed

emely

t the impri-

g was have

They

ck and ep in.

ced as proach

mation

to its ncepts

wives.

aestion.

SIGN

ILLUSTRATED BY CHARLES MAZOUJIAN

PAUL and I shall never cease to marvel at the miracle of it. The wonder of it. The wonder of music and of love and of life itself. Quite often, while working on one of his own serious compositions, or even in the middle of one of his Broadway musicals, he'll smile up at me and begin playing "The Princess Music."

"Darling," he'll say, "remember that night?"

Of course, he means the night of the concert.

"This had better be good," my father had growled that night as he shook the rain off his hat. "I had a devil of a time, finding a place to park the car."

"Tickets, please," the doorman said. Father handed the tickets to the doorman, who in turn gave the stubs to a pretty usherette. She smiled at us and tripped daintily toward the center aisle.

Suddenly Father grinned down at Paul. "This place would hold a lot of hay, wouldn't it?"

Paul started; then grinned up at my father. His black eyes shone; and so did his small, round face, partly from the scrubbing his mother had given it, but mostly because of the excitement he felt. This was his first visit to Rockhill Music Hall.

"Golly!" he said, turning slowly about.
"It's—it's like the magic palace!"

My mother smiled and straightened his cheap knit tie. She was very lovely that evening in her long, shimmering, green-gold gown and with the new, sparkling combs making you notice the waves in her soft, brown hair.

"There, that's better," she said, giving his tie a final tug. She took his small fist in her soft, white hand and added. "Come on, family."

She moved toward the center aisle with Paul.

Father took my hand and gave it a little squeeze, and I squeezed back. We were great pals. I knew that the only reason he'd driven us into the city through the rain was because I'd wanted to come so badly.

The four of us followed the pretty usherette to our seats. They were among the best in the house, and sitting there was almost like being on the stage with the orchestra.

Father helped Mother with her furs. "Anyway," he said, winking at me, "we aren't out anything for the tickets."

Which was all very true. Jonathan had sent the tickets to me along with a short letter which read: "My dear Letty: Here are tickets for the concert next Tuesday. One for you. One for your lovely mother. One for your doctor father, who will, I fear, be very bored. And one for the little boy who lives across the alley from you. I hope all of you will do me the honor of coming to hear my new symphony. Gratefully yours, Jonathan Johansson."

Jonathan! As long as I live, I shall never forget the first day I saw him.

It was a lovely spring day with the sunroom flooded by golden lights; and the maple leaves, young and green, were whispering excitedly just outside the open windows. There were birds, too, all irresistibly drawing my eyes away from the silly scales and tunes that someone expected small boys and girls to practice over and over again.

I slid from the piano bench. "Now," I said, "it's your turn, Paul."

Paul doubtfully eyed the little goldlettered clock, which Mother had given me for the express purpose of keeping me at the piano one hour each day. "Aren't you stopping three minutes early?" he asked.

"Oh, that's all right. I'll make it up tomorrow," I lied glibly.

Still looking doubtful, Paul climbed up on the bench. He lived with his mother in the little house behind our large one. The Gardners didn't own a piano, and Paul loved music. His mother worked two afternoons a week for my mother and insisted that Paul's practicing on our piano must be a part of her pay. It was a wonderful arrangement, I thought, for even then I must have been in love with Paul.

He ran through his practice exercises as if they were great fun; then started to do a little Mozart number. I curled up on the red-covered glider to watch and to listen. When he played, his face always seemed to shine as if a light were burning some place deep down inside him.

Suddenly I became aware of a long shadow stretching across the bright oak floor. Turning quickly, I saw a strange young man leaning against the doorsill. A great, wide-shouldered, blond man, taller than my father. He stood there with his hands in the pockets of his illitting white slacks, a half-smile on his big, bony face, the sun tangling with his bushy, uncombed hair. His eyes were blue, the bluest blue I've ever seen, and were fixed upon Paul.

I was too surprised to say a word. I just sat there with my mouth hanging open, thinking that he was the oddest looking person I'd ever seen. But knowing, in the way that children somehow know, that I liked him.

Paul finished the piece, and the man pulled big hands from his pockets and applauded. "Bravo!" he cried.

He lumbered into the room like an

We watched Jonathan's fingers as they flashed over the keys could not find the courage or the words to declare his love

ce

"The composer, Mr. Johansson, and his bride" awkward bear, upsetting a small flower stand that stood beside the door. A flower pot crashed to the floor and broke into a million pieces.

"I'm sorry," he said. "I didn't notice . . ."

"That's all right," I assured him. "It's an old flower pot."

He dropped to his knees awkwardly and began to gather up the pieces. "I'm forever upsetting things," he said ruefully.

I got a broom and a dustpan, and we cleaned up the mess.

"I almost forgot to explain what I'm doing here," he said, still worried and pink-faced about the flower pot. "I was walking along the street and heard the music. Naturally, I had to see who was playing. I'm Jonathan."

"I'm Letty," I said politely. "This is Paul."

He shook hands with Paul. "Paul," he said, "you play the Mozart beautifully, except in a place or two. Here, I'll show you."

He sat down on the bench beside Paul, rolled up the sleeves of his faded blue shirt, and began to play. The old piano came to life under his touch. And so did Mozart. Then abruptly, the melody was lost amid a great burst of chords, and Jonathan forgot Paul and Mozart.

And somehow Jonathan no longer seemed too tall and odd-looking and awkward. The muscles of his big shoulders rippled beautifully under the thin cotton shirt, and his clean, strong fingers danced like ten magic fairies over the keys.

His bony face seemed to change, too. It actually seemed to grow handsome and sweet and wonderful like the music.

I glanced up and saw Mother standing in the living room doorway. She'd been in the garden.

Jonathan saw her and came back to earth with a handful of wrong notes. He leaped to his feet and sent a shower of sheet music fluttering all over the room. His face turned a bright pink again as his fingers clutched frantically at the fluttering sheets of music.

"I'm sorry," he stammered. "I . . .

"That's quite all right," Mother said, helping him with the music. "It was lovely—your playing. What was it?"

"Nothing much," he told her, looking more embarrassed than ever. "Just something I wrote a few years back." He gave up trying to pick up the scattered music. "You're Mrs. Phillips, aren't you? My aunt mentioned you. She claims your husband is the best doctor in the world."

p

m pi

Pl

de

m

th

no

car

ove

do sad got tha

stor

pri

lov

skir

wic

Jon "

mos

Jon

a s

Mus

girl.

cam

was laug

laug

"Wh

barr

man

ing.

smile

on a

She

that her."

its si

even,

voice

bony

big f

like a

a clu

do pr

ful t beaut

June,

"Bı

"T

Ab

Mother laughed softly. "And you're Jonathan Johansson. Your aunt told me that you were coming here to Merrium for a visit and to do some work on your new symphony."

He nodded and turned to Paul. "I was going to show your son how to play the Mozart, but . . ."

Mother put an arm about Paul's shoulders, smiled, and gave him a little hug.

"He's not my son, I'm sorry to say," she said. "His name is Paul Gardner."

Jonathan grinned at Paul. "Now, Paul," he said, "I'll show you what makes Mozart tick."

He sat down and worked with Paul for an hour, while Mother and I sat on the big red glider, listening. It was all pretty wonderful, and how Paul loved

But suddenly, Jonathan glanced at his watch and leaped to his feet, almost upsetting both Paul and the piano bench. "Heavens to Pete!" he exclaimed. "I promised Aunt Eve I'd drive uptown with her this afternoon."

He lunged for the door and somehow made it outside without tearing the screen door off the hinges.

"Golly," Paul said in an awed voice, "can he play!"

Mother's eyes were sparkling. "Jonathan Johansson," she told us, "is one of the most promising young composers in the country today. Someday he may be a very famous man."

"Heavens to Pete!" Paul exclaimed.

JONATHAN came to our sunroom the very next day, bearing an awkward bundle in his awkward arms. It was a new flower pot. How he managed to get from town to our place without breaking it, I'll never know.

After this, he came many times during the spring and early summer. During those first few weeks, he was usually gay and full of fun and overflowing with crazy little yarns and tunes for Paul and me. He would drop down on the piano bench, run his long fingers over the keys, give us a solemn nod, and begin to tell some outlandish story of his own invention, set to rippling music.

Of course, not all his visits were like that. Jonathan had his unhappy moments when he'd have little to say or to joke about. And his darker moods came more and more frequently as spring moved into summer. On these occasions, he'd just sit there and play music that sometimes made me want to cry.

One bright warm day, Mother came in and stood by the piano, watching Jonathan's marvelous fingers as they flashed over the keys.

THE SIGN

"How's the new symphony coming along?" she asked, after he'd stopped playing.

The fingers of his right hand kept making soft little runs and trills up among the high, tinkly notes of the piano, while the blue of his eyes seemed to darken.

"To be right honest about it, Mrs. Phillips," he replied, "I've bogged down. Nothing sounds right to me, anymore."

"I'm sorry," Mother said. "Perhaps the children are annoying you. If you say the word, I'll keep them . . ."

"Oh, no," he said quickly. "That's not it. It's just me."

e-ie

e,

ane

ers

ed.

he rd vas

to out

ur-ur-

ally

vith

and

ano

the

egin

his like moor to ame

ring

occa-

nusic

came hing

they

SIGN

ry.

C.

He left soon after that, an ungainly, carelessly dressed young man, stumbling over his own feet. Mother stood in the doorway, watching him, smiling a little sadly, I thought.

And then came the never-to-be-forgotten day when Jonathan told us the story. His face seemed drawn and pale that day, I remember, and his blue eyes had a haunted look in them.

"I'll tell you a different kind of a story today," he said, "A story about a princess. And a poor boy who fell in love with her."

I PULLED my legs up on the red glider and spread my pleated blue skirt over my knees. Paul sat on the old wicker chair where he could watch Jonathan's fingers.

"Once upon a time there lived the most beautiful princess imaginable," Jonathan began, while his fingers played a sweet, lovely tune. ("The Princess Music," Paul named it afterward.)

"This princess wasn't a very large girl. In fact, the top of her golden head came only to the boy's shoulders. She was kind and good and had a lovely laugh." (We could hear the princess laughing in the music he played.) "When she was a trifle confused or embarrassed, she had a delightful little mannerism of tossing her head and smiling. And you could never forget her smile. It was like a burst of sunshine on a dismal day. She was wonderful! She was-well, it's not at all surprising that the boy fell madly in love with her.'

Abruptly the music changed. It lost its smooth sweetness and became uneven, awkward, even a little ugly.

"The boy," Jonathan went on, his voice sounding unhappy, "was a big and bony fellow who was forever getting his big feet tangled up in things. He was like a clumsy clown. Even his name was a clumsy name to say.

"But there was one thing he could do pretty well. He could create beautiful things. Or. at least, they seemed beautiful to him. And to some people who should know. Anyway, he decided to build something very, very beautiful for the princess.

After thinking about it carefully, he decided to build a great palace with his own two hands and his heart. Then, perhaps, after the princess realized that he'd built it just for her because he loved her so much, she'd understand the things that were in his heart. Perhaps, she would marry him someday after he had become a famous builder. So, filled with hope and happiness, he set to work."

"All by himself?" Paul asked doubt-

"All by himself. You see, this wasn't the kind of palace that kings live init was sort of a magic palace.'

Over the luncheon table in a big city restaurant, two middleaged businessmen were discussing the young fellows in their employ. One remarked that the younger men seemed irresponsi-

"None of them seems to show any inclination to marry and settle down, either," he said.

"That's right," his friend agreed. "For some reason, modern young men seem to fear marriage. Why, before I was married, I didn't even know the meaning of fear!"

-Lawrence Waters

"Did he tell the princess he was building it for her?" I wanted to know.

"No, he didn't. A time or two, he tried; but he couldn't seem to find the right words. He was a rather bashful boy, I'm afraid."

Abruptly the music changed again. The boy was building the palace now. You felt it as you listened. You could almost see the boy shaping the huge foundation stones, striving to make each one a perfect part of this wonderful structure.

You could see the palace grow above the foundation, becoming more delicate and more beautiful as it towered into the sky. You could hear the crash of giant oaks as the boy felled them and you could hear the ring of his ax as he hewed the straight trunks into flawless beams for the palace.

And then, as the palace neared completion, you could see the sun sparkling on the bright marble walls. You could see it reflected by the lovely colored windows that were like those of some great cathedral.

Paul and I sat spellbound, listening to that magic palace grow. Feeling the exhausting but satisfying struggle of the boy as he worked with such loving care. But suddenly Jonathan stopped playing. He stopped before the palace had been finished, leaving the beautiful rooms open to the rain and the wind and the cold.

I T was frightening, this sudden and unsatisfactory ending. I straightened out my legs and sat up. Paul slid from the old wicker chair and took a quick step toward the piano.

"Go on," he said. "Finish the story." But Jonathan got to his feet and shook his blond head.

"That's all there is," he said. "You see, one day the boy learned that a rich prince was in love with the princess and intended to marry her. So the boy didn't see much sense in finishing the palace."

"That's no way for a story to end," I said angrily. "The boy and the princess must get married and live happily ever . . ."

"Letty's right," Paul said in his serious way. "The boy mustn't give up. He must go ahead with his palace and then . . ."

"Sure," I said. "If I was the princess and knew that the boy was building a beautiful palace for me, I'd . . ."

"But she didn't know about it," Paul reminded. "And if she didn't know about it, how could the boy expect her to guess he was in love with her and wanted to marry her."

"She couldn't," I said. "The boy was awful dumb not to tell her."

"Yep," Paul said as if the whole matter was now settled. "All he's got to do is go to the princess and tell her all about it. If I was him, I'd just sit down at the piano like Jonathan did and . . ."

"Silly," I said, "they didn't have pianos then. They had lutes and harps

"I'd sit down at my harp," Paul went on doggedly, "and play the 'Palace Music' for her and tell her all about how I'd built it just for her. Then when I came to the unfinished part, I'd say, 'Now see here, princess, you've got to help me."

"And the princess," I interrupted excitedly, "would go with him to the unfinished palace and see how beautiful it was and know how much the boy loved her. Then she'd help him finish it and they'd get married.'

"That's the way it would work out," Paul said enthusiastically. "Now Jonathan, you can finish playing."

"Heavens to Pete!" Jonathan cried. His eyes were suddenly sparkling, and a grin had come to his big mouth. "Funny I couldn't have thought of that myself. Not giving up—just going ahead—Say, I must be dumb like the boy when it comes to . . ."

He plunged toward the door, kicking a throw rug into a corner. He made it through the door without mishap. Perhaps because I had my fingers crossed.

"Where're you going?" Paul shouted after him.

But Jonathan didn't answer. He was loping madly down the street toward his Aunt Eve's home.

We never saw him again. That is, not in Merrium. Then one fall day came the tickets for the symphony concert and the little letter from Jonathan. I was so happy to know that he hadn't forgotten us that I almost cried. And now, here we were, Mother, Father, Paul, and I, sitting in those wonderful center aisle seats in the music hall, watching the orchestra players file out on the big stage.

AT last, the conductor came out and bowed, while everyone applauded politely. Everyone except Paul. He was too excited to do anything but look and listen.

The first number, an overture, began and ended. The applause died down, and something new seemed to fill the auditorium. A feeling of breathless expectancy.

I glanced at Mother. Her face seemed a trifle pale. My father was tapping his strong fingers on the arm of his chair. Paul felt the tenseness, too. He leaned forward and looked about wonderingly.

And then the music began.

I sat up suddenly, knowing that I'd heard it before. I glanced inquiringly at Paul. He was sitting up straight on the edge of his seat, his dark eyes dancing. He had heard that music before, too.

His lips formed the words: "The Princess Music."

That was it! Jonathan's princess. The small, lovely princess with the golden hair and a smile like a burst of sunshine and a cute way of tossing her head when she was confused or embarrased.

The music changed abruptly, and now we saw the boy, awkward, shy, loving the princess from afar. And then the magic palace began to go up. The great blocky foundation. The shining marble walls, the flawless oak beams, the beautiful windows. It was all there just as Jonathan had told us that day in the sunroom. Only with the great orchestra telling the story, it was somehow much more wonderful and impressive than it had been before,

As the music moved on and the palace neared completion, I felt a tiny knot of cold form someplace way down inside me. The tiny knot began to grow. It turned from cold to fear.

I glanced uneasily at Paul. His small fists were doubled tightly. He, too, was afraid. Afraid that the music would end just before the boy finished the magic palace.

I held my breath. If the music stopped, I knew I'd burst out crying, I crossed my fingers. I even said a little prayer—and the music faltered, almost dying away.

But suddenly, it leaped up, bright and gay and sparkling, rushing on to a triumphant and glorious finish! The palace had been completed. The princess and the boy were in it, I knew, and there they'd live together happily forever and ever! I wanted to stand up and cheer.

A spotlight flooded one of the boxes, and there sat Jonathan Johansson. Our Jonathan, even if he didn't look quite as I expected him to look. Tonight he had on evening clothes, and in them he looked tall and dignified. And his hair was combed down slick! He was wonderful!

He stood there and bowed and smiled down at us. Then he lifted up someone who sat in the chair beside him. A small lovely girl, whose golden head came scarcely to his big shoulders.

"Heavens to Pete!" Paul whispered.
"The princess!"

But I knew better. I'd seen her pictures in the society pages of the Sunday papers. Her father owned the steel mills and was a very important man.

"She's Janette Whitney," I whispered, "She's the princess," Paul said again, At that moment, the conductor said, "The composer, Mr. Jonathan Johansson, and his bride, the—"

The applause drowned out the rest of his words, and the girl blushed prettily and tossed her head in a way that made my heart leap. I knew then that Paul was right. She was the princess, and Jonathan himself had been the poor boy in love with her, but afraid to tell her so. And the magic palace had not been the kind of a palace I had imagined, but this symphony which Jonathan had written for Janette Whitney, because he loved her so.

Paul tugged at my sleeve. Glancing at him, I saw the dream in his eyes.

"Someday," he whispered, "I'll write music like that, too, Letty. Someday, you and I will sit up there and . . ."

Now, long after the dream has come true, Paul will stop right in the middle of one of his own compositions and play the "Princess Music."

"Darling," he'll say, "remember?"
Then he'll pull me down on the piano bench beside him, and we'll marvel at the miracle of music and of love and of life itself.

THE GRIMY TOWNS

by CLIFFORD J. LAUBE

I have nothing against the cities of swank
Where the homes are neat and the lawns all trimmed, Boasting a civic center and bank
And park-like tidiness, properly hymned.

But give me a town with a mill or two

And a roundhouse nudging the railroad track,

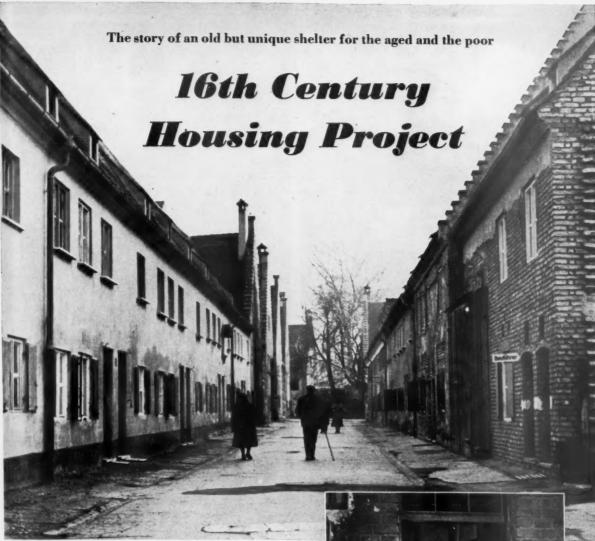

With the plumes and the pulsing of steam in view

And at least one smoking chimney-stack.

For the town of my choice is no mere retreat To quiet and peace and a serenade, But a bustling junction where hammers beat And presses rumble, and things are made.

It is wrong that a town be rashly judged
By the reek and the smoke around it curled.
Surely the windows of Eden were smudged
That morning God started the wheels of the world.

June.

One of the old streets in the Fuggerei, so named after its founder, Jacob Fugger, the financier.

● Throughout the United States, housing projects designed to fit the budget of those of lower incomes have been built by the Federal Government and by private insurance companies. Though this is a comparatively recent idea with us, it is very old to the Germans. As far back as 1519, Jacob Fugger of Augsburg, Germany, built fifty-two homes and over one hundred apartments for the poor. This settlement, which $\mathbf{s}$ a small town in itself, is complete with rows of houses, its own church, walks, and gates.

Partially destroyed by the last war, the settlement still stands and is being rapidly restored. The rent today is the same as when the building was erected centuries ago—one Rhenish Florin or less than one dollar a year! Today the requirement to become a tenant in the project is a minimum age of sixty-five.

The village gate keeper locks up at 10 P.M. It costs latecomers 10 pfennigs to enter after that.

SIGN

le

The ladies admiring the table cloth are seated in one of the living rooms in the Fuggerei apartments.

The lady of the house is cooking on a hearth that was built into this original house centuries ago.

The pastor at the church door. When Fugger built the village he also supplied a beautiful church.

An elderly couple kneel before the Blessed Sacrament in the very spacious but simply adorned church.

THE SIGN

June,

This frau lives in a more modern apartment. Instead of the picturesque hearth, she cooks on an iron stove.

Plumbing, though not of the best, is adequate. Above, an old gent draws water from one of the town wells.

The Jacob Fugger memorial. Our lady is depicted with her mantle around the homes and church of the town.

The remains of one of the local soldiers is kept in the church. Note armor and gear of the time.

A SIGN PICTURE ARTICLE

June, 1953

SIGN

Not only pineapples, palm trees, and thundering surf on scenic beaches—but a rare accomplishment in interracial living and democratic traditions of culture, religion, and patriotism, will make our proposed state of Hawaii the

Brightest Star in the Flag

by JOHN E. DINEEN

Photos by Religious News and United Press

HAWAII has beauty. It has climate. It grows sugar and pineapples, and it not only entices tourists—it charms, persuades, and convinces them, and like Paris and Rome it leaves with them a memory that becomes a longing: the longing to return there, to rejoin that part of their hearts which they have left there.

Hawaii, it may well be, is a way of life. It is not only a group of islands in the Pacific Ocean, it is also an accomplishment—an accomplishment of three cultures: the Polynesian, the American, the Christian.

Talk with Joseph Farrington about Hawaii, and you become convinced that your impressions of it as a way of life are well founded. Here, in this fluent, eloquent, quietly affable descendant of New England stock, is an embodiment and advocate of that way. Successful as advocate, because he is so genuine as embodiment, Mr. Farrington is Delegate from the Territory of Hawaii in the House of Representatives of the United States, in which he has a voice but not a vote. Proud to be an American and a Hawaiian, he has found that, on the whole, there has been only one recurring incident during his ten years in Washington that has given him a twinge.

He can look back upon those ten years with no little satisfaction. Hawaiians, on battlefields throughout the world, established an enviable record fighting for the United States during World War II. Hawaiian prosperity has waxed. So has the movement for Hawaiian statehood. But whenever, on the floor of the House, the representative of Hawaii asks for recognition, the Speaker responds by addressing him as "the delegate from Hawaii." Others in the House are addressed as "the gentleman from New York," "the gentleman from California," and so forth; but the gentleman from Hawaii is addressed simply as "the delegate." He will not officially become a gentleman until Hawaii becomes a

There is, of course, nothing personal in the twinge that this causes Mr. Farrington. There is, you suspect, something deeper, something larger in it almost a philosophic bewilderment and bafflement at that freak of circumstance and legality which, in withholding statehood from Hawaii for so long, has constituted an unintentional affront to a way of life and to the principle from which that way of life arose.

"Back in the nineteenth century," Mr. Farrington says, "the Polynesian natives and the American merchants, mariners, and missionaries who met in

THE SIGN

June,

Ha

vidi

Pol

othe

flou

man with The that at a or a beca of 1 there a po It is wher who tiani prod I" Farri Haw melti Canc nesia the i inter happ

call t

Amer

Hawaii, met each other just a little more than halfway. There were individual differences of opinion, naturally, and even individual quarrels; but the Polynesians as a group, and the Americans as a group, took to each other. A spirit of dignity, friendliness, and mutual acceptance prevailed and flourished. It still prevails and flourishes.

R. Farrington's contentment with M this state of affairs is not that of a man who looks at a house he has built with his own hands and finds it good. There is about such contentment an element of conceit. Rather, it is like that of a man who looks at the sea, or at a tree, or a mountain, or a child, or a fine day, and finds it good simply because it is there. The Hawaiian way of life is good simply because it is there. It is not the result of a theory, a political slogan, or a proclamation. It is something that simply happened when goodwill met goodwill. People who practiced democracy and Christianity first and preached them second produced it almost casually.

"The odd thing about all this," Mr. Farrington points out, "is that, in Hawaii, race isn't swallowed up in a melting pot. There is race consciousness there, but not race prejudice. Caucasians fraternize mainly Caucasians. Polynesians with with Polynesians. Orientals with Orientals. But the three races also intermingle and intermarry. It's something like what happens here in the States-or, as we call them, the mainland. Here, we are all American. But we have our Irish-American, German-American, ItalianAmerican and other such societieswithout being at all any the less American. And people of Irish descent marry people of German descent, and so forth. It's something like that in Hawaii, only more so; because there, you see, we have people not only of different Caucasian national origins but of different racial origins.

"But we're all Americans, just as we're all God's children. Some of us died for our country, the United States, during World War II and others have been dying for it in Korea. We never, I should like to stress, talk about the United States as something differentwe talk about the mainland. We feel far less strange about you-you mainlanders-than you feel about us."

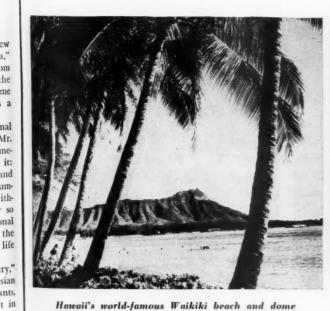

The story of Hawaii as a part of the United States is not one of conquest, forced annexation, or diplomatic sleightof-hand. It is a simple story of a native people who asked that their sovereign country be annexed as a territory of the United States and that they themselves become eligible as citizens of a full and proper federal state. Hawaii in the nineteenth century was a constitutional monarchy, most of whose kings were enlightened and progressive. A crossroads of the whaling and other trades, it did not resist, but welcomed, its contacts with the Americans, British. and French who called there. Amercans in particular settled down in gradually increasing numbers, establishing businesses and building homes; the natives found Western democracy and the Christian religion agreeable to their healthy minds; and affairs on the whole, politically and economically, were as JOHN EDWARD DINEEN, branch chief in the International Press Service of the Department of State, has published articles in many leading publications.

bland as the climate. In 1893, the last monarch, Queen Liliuokalani, not proving quite as harmonious to her peoples' taste in politics as her name was to their taste in music, was deposed, and the people asked to be annexed to the United States.

Their nationalism never having been questioned, frustrated, or persecuted, they were not defensive or crotchety about it. They had the imagination, and the humanity, to wish to belong to a larger, and a friendly, segment of the human race. They were not insular then, and they are not insular now.

LIKE Texas, Hawaii was once a re-public. The 1893 petition for annexation having been denied, the republic was founded in 1894, with Sanford B. Dole as president, and administered the islands until 1898, when they became "an integral part of the United States." They were incorporated as a territory in 1900. They have never been a colony, possession, or dependency. As a territory, they have a fifteen-member Senate and a thirtymember House. The governor is appointed by the President of the United States, but his veto of a bill may be overridden by a two-thirds vote of each legislative branch.

There have been three objections to granting statehood to Hawaii: (1) That Polynesian and Oriental strains in the population outnumber the Caucasian, (2) that Communists have Hawaii's world-famous Waikiki beach and dome of Diamond Head in background. An island view

A group of happy Sisters from the mainland staff one of many Catholic Hawaiian schools

June, 1953

GN

ew m he me a nal Mr. meit: and ımith-50 mal the life obtained control of the Hawaiian Democratic Party (often the minority party in territorial elections of delegates to Congress), and (3) that the islands are not contiguous to any of the forty-eight states. These objections are now pretty academic, but authoritative answers to them reinforce what has already been claimed in this article for Hawaii as a way of life.

(1) As for Caucasians being outnumbered, the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs reported in 1951: "Hawaii has been thoroughly American in word, thought, and deed for a half century or longer. Its American institutions and school system have produced American citizens worthy to stand on a basis of full equality with the best citizens of any state in the Union."

(2) As for Communists in the Hawaiian Democratic Party, J. Edgar Hoover, in 1951, placed the total number of Communists in Hawaii at 36, whereas there had been 160 in 1946. Senate and House committees, moreover, have reported "the evidence shows that as of 1951 the people of Hawaii have successfully cast Communistic influence out of all phases of their political, social, cultural, and educational activities."

(3) As for the noncontiguity of Hawaii to the mainland, the Senate Committee said: "Noncontiguity, in a geographical sense, has been no bar to the development of a typically American society, with American ideals and traditions in an extremely rich and fertile area. . . . In this day of the radio and telegraph and of jet propulsion, when the distance between Honolulu and Washington is a matter of hours, it has even less validity than in 1850, when standard transportation from the eastern seaboard to the West was by covered wagon or sailing ship."

Although Hawaii, with 499,794 citizens, is smaller in population than all but four states, it pays higher taxes to the national treasury than eleven states; and although during the 1947-51 period it contributed close to five hundred million dollars in taxes, it received federal grants of only fifty million.

HAWAII, then, more than "pays its way." Its principal businesses are sugar, pineapples, the tourist trade, and flowers.

In Hawaii, the exotic also has beneath it a sturdy common denominator of Catholicism. A Catholic population of 145,000 means that there is about one Catholic among every three and a half Hawaiians-a better average than that on the mainland. Established as a Prefecture Apostolic in 1826 and as a Vicariate in 1844, Hawaii was established as a diocese in 1941. The ordinary is Most Rev. James J. Sweeney, whose cathedral is in Honolulu, on the island of Oahu, and whose responsibilities extend to the islands of Hawaii, Kauai, Lanai, Maui, and Molokai (where the leper colony founded by Father Damien is located).

There are 55 parishes, 56 missions, and four chapels in Bishop Sweeney's diocese: 127 priests; 363 nuns; 84 brothers. There are three private and nine parochial grade schools; four private and three parochial high schools; two orphanages; a general hospital, St. Francis' in Honolulu, and the special hospital at the leper colony. There is a newspaper, the Hawaii Catholic Herald, with a circulation of 15,000.

Of the 127 priests, the majority are members of religious congregations. Bishop Sweeny needs more diocesan clergy, and he is working hard to interest Hawaiian young men of Polynesian and Oriental descent in the priesthood. A vigorous, apostolic, and eloquent man, he points out that whereas on the mainland there is an average of one priest for every 650 Catholics, on the islands there is only one for every 1,200. There is also great need for more nuns and teachers.

What remains for Hawaii to become a state is (1) for Congress to approve the Hawaiian Constitution (which, because it is an admirable document, the Congress will undoubtedly do) and (2) for Hawaii to hold primary elections in October, 1954, and general elections in November of the same year, to elect state officials, and two senators and one representative to Congress. With the state-to-be abounding in political and spiritual leaders like Delegate Farrington and Bishop Sweeney, and with the political, cultural, economic, and religious aspects of the Hawaiian way of life being what they are-that is, a remarkable instance of industry, harmony, and brotherhoodthe forty-ninth star in the flag of the Union will not only be one of the most beautiful. It will also be one of the brightest.

This picturesque edifice, now the seat of the Territorial Government in Honolulu, will be Hawaii's first capitol

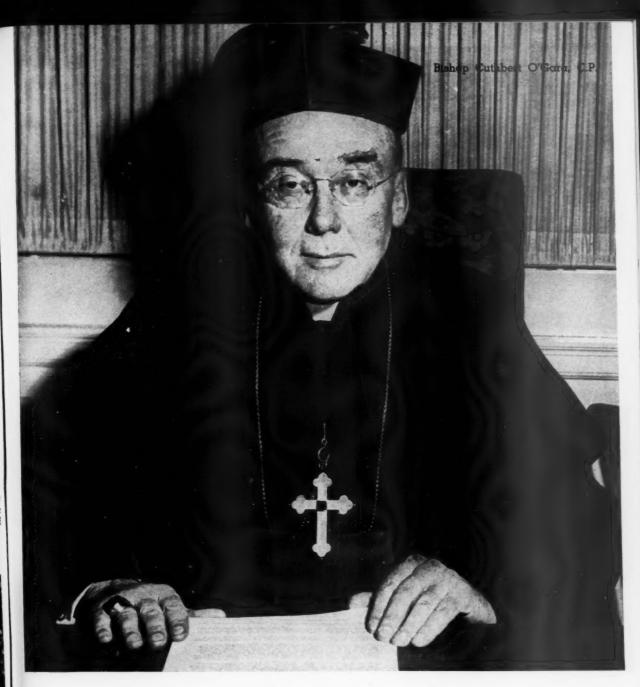

Typical of the quiet dignity of her race, this Polynesian woman weaves her ancient skills

THE SIGN

To from with to wrin his only a Our word expell again five we lune.

The Bishop Gets Out of Jail

THE gates of a Chinese Communist jail closed on Bishop O'Gara in July, 1951. From that time, until his eviction from China on April 26, we have had no direct contact with him. While in prison he was permitted occasionally to write a brief note to the priests living under house arrest in his mission, requesting clothing, soap, etc. This was the only news about Bishop O'Gara we were able to give you.

Our apprehension was allayed to some extent with the word that the Bishop and his Vicar General were to be expelled from Red China on March 22; only to mount again when the Bishop failed to appear in Hong Kong. For five weeks we knew nothing about what had happened to him.

We feared he had been transferred to another Red prison. Actually, he had been taken to a hospital in Changsha.

Upon arrival in Hong Kong, in the company of Father Paul Ubinger, C. P., and Father William Westhoven, C. P., Bishop O'Gara was placed immediately in St. Francis Hospital. He is reported to be in "fair" condition.

Seven Passionist priests remain in Red China. Two of these, Fathers Marcellus White and Justin Garvey, are in jail. The others, Fathers Linus Lombard, Ernest Hotz. Lawrence Mullins, John Baptist Maye, and Jerome Does, are under house arrest in their missions. We ask your prayers for their deliverance from the Reds.

June, 1953

SIGN

the

the

Photo by R. E. McLaughlia

• Mrs. Marie Kerman of Elizabeth, New Jersey, has been unable to walk for twenty-eight years due to paralysis. She has spent half her life within the same four walls. Her confinement has been neither tedious nor depressing, since her nimble hands enable her to communicate with persons in distant lands and exchange letters and symbols of prayer and faith. This zealous woman has designed and made weatherproof Sacred Heart badges which she has sent all over the world. Thousands of our soldiers in Korea wear her badges. In her files at the hospital she has many sincere replies from such distinguished men as Generals MacArthur, Matthew Ridgway, James Van Fleet; and Warren Austin, former U. S. Delegate to the U. N.

In addition to this, Mrs. Kerman knits for the lepers in India; writes letters and cards for patients unable to use their hands; sews for the Red Cross; aids Community Chest appeals, crochets prize-winning articles, and repairs statues which she sends to the foreign missions. She has recruited over two hundred members for the Sister Miriam Teresa League of Prayer, an organization seeking the canonization of a young nun who died at the hospital twenty-five years ago.

People

THE SIGN

June, 1

• Former holder of the world's distance record for jet aircraft, commanding officer of the Lowry Air Force Base Fighter contingent, a World War II fighter pilot, and one of the air force's first jet pilots—these are some of the phrases that describe Major Ranger Curran. But perhaps a better description would be "defender of the faith."

Curran. a tall, 220-pound. ex-amateur boxer from Boston, gives what he calls the pagans in the air force a rough time. Not one to water down the Faith, he puts it straight to playboy pilots: "You've got to live right or you'll fry like a fiery faggot in hell." he says.

The thirty-five-year-old senior pilot's favorite author is Chesterton, but he reads everything Catholic that he can get his hands on. "We don't have to apologize to anyone," he says; "we have it and they don't."

He is in constant demand as a speaker, especially to college groups, where they give his straightfrom-the-shoulder approach a howling ovation.

He is shown below with his wife, Celie, and their four children.

Photo by Warren Turilli

31

IGN

DURING the course of His public life, our divine Lord ministered to people whose number can scarcely be estimated. It is true that some of the commentators on the Bible prefer to understand the words "crowd" and "multitude" in the gospels as indicative of quality rather than quantity. They tell us that when the evangelists speak of "multitude" or "crowd" they are using those terms in the same way as we speak of the "people," the "masses," as distinguished from the wealthy or the ruling class.

Nevertheless, there are many instances in the gospel narratives in which we cannot disregard the idea of numbers.

Consider the "four thousand men besides women and children" whom Jesus fed miraculously in the mountains near the Sea of Galilee. (Mk. 15:38) The "five thousand men besides women and children" whom He had fed in a similar manner on another occasion. (Mk. 14:13)

Think of the evening in Capharnaum when as St. Luke tells us "all they that had any sick with divers diseases brought them to Him. But He laying His hands on every one of them healed them." (Lk. 4:40) St. Mark relating the same incident says "all the city was gathered together at the door."

(Mk. 1:33)

There was a crowd whose number was so great that Zachaeus must climb up into a sycamore tree in order that he might see our Lord. (Lk. 19:4) St. Matthew tells us that as Jesus entered the confines of Judea on His last journey to Jerusalem, "great multitudes followed Him." (Mt. 19:2) St. Luke recalls a multitude so great "that they trod upon one another." (Lk. 12:1) In the account of the first Palm Sunday we read, "A very great multitude spread their garments in the way: and others cut boughs from the trees and strewed them in the way: And the multitudes that went before and followed, cried, saying: 'Hosanna to the Son of David: Blessed is He that .cometh in the name of the Lord: Hosanna in the highest". (Mt. 21:8) Indeed, the enemies of Jesus witnessing this event did not hesitate to say, "Do you see that we prevail nothing? Behold the whole world is gone after Him." (Jn. 12:19)

In other words, making allowance for those who were led by mere curiosity; discounting those who started out to follow Him and then, for one reason or another, walked with Him no more;

at the end of His life Jesus must still have had a goodly number of followers.

The question presents itself, therefore, "Where were the followers of Jesus during His Sacred Passion?" From beginning to end, they were conspicuous by their absence as the tragic events of the Sacred Passion transpired.

The gospel story is ominously silent concerning them. We can only hope that when it says, "The whole multitude together cried out, saying, 'Away with this man, and release unto us Barabbas,' (Lk. 23:18), the word "multitude" does not include Jesus' followers.

It is not until Jesus is actually making

St. John speaks of two others who stood by the foot of the cross with the sorrowful mother of Jesus and the beloved disciple: Mary of Cleophas, a relative of the mother Mary and the faithful Magdalen concerning whom Jesus commanded that "wherever the gospel shall be preached in the whole world, that also which she hath done be told for a memory of her." (Mt. 26:13)

At the moment of the death of Jesus "the veil of the temple was rent in two from the top even to the bottom, and the earth quaked and the rocks were rent." (Mt. 27:51) "And the centurion who stood over against Him seeing that crying out in this manner He had given up the ghost, said: 'In-

Take Up the Cross

Crowds flocked to Christ during the fair weather days of His ministry. They stayed away when the going got rough and unfashionable. The same thing happens today

by PASCHAL DREW, C.P.

the sorrowful journey to Calvary that we find Him receiving the first offer of sympathy. St. Luke, after telling us that He was so weakened that the cross had to be taken from Him and laid on the unwilling shoulders of Simon of Cyrene (Lk. 23:26), says that among the multitude who followed were a band of women who bewailed and lamented Him. (Lk. 23:27) To these generous souls who did not withhold from Him at least the tribute of their tears, Jesus Himself paid the tribute of the only words which He spoke on the way to Calvary. "Daughters of Jerusalem," He said, "weep not over Me; but weep for yourselves and for your children.

Another even more pitiable figure stands out amongst the followers of Jesus in His Passion. A follower who came only at the eleventh hour. The companion in suffering who from the height of his own cross, turned his head toward Jesus and said to Him, "Lord, remember me when Thou shalt come into Thy Kingdom." The penitent thief, to whom our Lord replied, "Amen I say to thee, this day thou shalt be with Me in Paradise."

deed this Man was the Son of God." (Mk. 15:39)

Finally the gospel tells us that Joseph of Arimathea, a noble counsellor, claimed the dead body of Jesus from Pilate, and together with Nicodemus who at first came to Jesus by night, buried Him in his own tomb.

This is the complete scriptural record of the part played by His followers in the sufferings and death of our Lord. Not a very impressive array, surely. We cannot help asking the question, "Where were the others?"

The story is told of Clovis, King of the Franks, that upon first hearing a narration of the sufferings and death of our Lord, he became so indignant that he stood up and shouted, "If I and my Franks had been there, we would not have allowed them to treat Him so." Brave saying indeed! And a saying which has probably been echoed in hundreds of thousands of hearts throughout the centuries! But, we wonder.

From a natural standpoint, the people of our Lord's time were not peculiar to the time and place in which they lived.

THE SIGN

Do

ers

ferei

twen

It w

and follo

docti

varia

of th

if Jes

form

unde

would

into those

our s

who a for th

for H scour legion

marri virtue

with minds

June,

"The Cross Bearer"-Thiensen, Courtesy American Museum of Photography

"And they forced a certain passerby . . . to take up His Cross" (Mark 15:21)

Do the actions of present-day followers of Christ lead us to believe that the story we have told would be different if He had lived on earth in the twentieth century, or we in the first? It was not an easy thing for the men and women of our Lord's time to follow the precepts of a Teacher whose doctrines and spirit were so at variance with the doctrine and spirit of the world of His time.

IT is not an easy thing today. In fact, we have every reason to believe that if Jesus were in the world today in the form of man, He would be made to undergo the Passion all over again. He would be arrested and bound and cast into prison-gotten out of the way-by those who exile Him from our homes, our schools, our governments-by those who arrest and kill priests and prelates for the "crime" of inculcating reverence for His name and teaching. He would be scourged by those-and their name is legion-who inside and outside of marriage show no regard for the holy virtue of purity. He would be crowned with thorns by those who poison the minds of young and old by false teaching and filth in the form of books, magazines, papers, pictures, shows, and movies. He would be made to travel the way of the cross again to the point of exhaustion by lazy people who are too busy to fulfill their obligation of worshipping God, too selfish to fulfill the duties of their state in life, too sensuous (not to say sensual) to prepare themselves for the proper discharge of those duties. Jesus would be nailed to the cross today by those who place sentimental mumblings about humanity above the law of God which says, "Thou shalt not kill."

Before passing judgment on the followers of our Lord in the time of His earthly sojourn, we must admit that, close as they were to Him and privileged to hear His teaching from His own lips, nevertheless, they did not have the example of Jesus suffering nor the graces which those sufferings merited, until after He had died.

Present-day followers of Jesus cannot claim the excuse which may be offered for His original followers. We have the example and grace of our Lord's Sacred Passion.

If you had lived in Palestine during the first Holy Week, would you have come forward in His defense? Would you have been brave enough to follow Him openly? Would you have been convinced enough to stand firm for His doctrine regardless of who might contradict it?

 ${
m Y}^{
m OU}$ need not stop at idle speculation regarding these things. You would have done just what you are doing now. What kind of a follower of Christ are you? Are you conspicuous by your absence whilst He is suffering in the world today? It is not easy to be a follower of Christ. But, of course, He never said that it would be easy. He promised to His followers a reward such as "eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive." (I Cor: II, 9) But He also said, "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself and take up his cross daily, and follow Me." (Lk. 9:23).

PASCHAL DREW, C.P., M.A., writer and outstanding radio speaker, is Professor of Greek at Holy Cross Preparatory Seminary, Dunkirk,

June, 1953

ıt

0-rd

in rd.

Ve

on,

of a ath

ant

fI

we reat

da

een

of

But,

the

not hich

IGN

Photos by H. Armstrong Roberts

A father's most important job is to love his children and then to give them the important sense of family belonging

A GENERATION ago the father's part in the early development of the child, especially in the first few years, was regarded as one of little importance. In the later developmental years the mother was looked upon as the most important factor in the raising of children and even came to be considered as the scapegoat for any abnormal or delinquent behavior of the child.

This is because the early development of a child was regarded only from the physical viewpoint. The mother nurses the baby, changes his diapers, and takes entire care of him. In asking about the health and well-being of a child, you inquire, "How much does he weigh?", "How does he sleep?", or "How does he eat?". When all physical symptoms seem excellent, the child is considered as well and healthy. The psychological development is practically neglected. In a movie depicting the first year of the child, I noted that practically the only role played by the father was burning the toast, while the mother was in the hospital.

I emphasize that love and affection and "belonging" are of immeasurable importance in the development of the child, and this must come not only from the mother, but equally from the father.

It is natural that the child's interest during the first two or three months of its life is concentrated on the functions of eating and sleeping. However, even in this time the father may play a certain role in handling the child, in changing the diapers, or giving a bath.

I WANT to stress that the recognized presence of the father in the home is necessary for the healthy development of any child. The father must not be regarded only as the one who makes money, as much money as possible, even to the point of having a second job directly after supper. A father devoting all his time to the support of his family neglects the most important duty of fatherhood, and he becomes a stranger to his children. A

Fatherhood as a vocation has come into its own, with science abetting the Church to prove that figure according ho

doi ho!

per he and

"sis pet

Fathers are V. I. P.'s

by ROBERT P. ODENWALD

Fathers must be providers also mother one day complained to her husband that their little girl put up a fight every night when it was time to go to bed. He replied that he would see about that, he would put her to bed that night. It was a threat but the little one regarded it as a promise. That night the child refused to stay in bed unless her father put her there. He was astonished when he heard of it and went up the steps two at a time with a shout, "Get into that bed quick." With a happy laugh the child fled to her bed and cuddled down, smiling happily at her father. She insisted upon saying her prayers again and added a word of thanks for her "dear daddy." That father was wise enough to realize the love he had denied his child and that he had denied himself.

THE SIGN

Such

regar

cause

often rathe

In ex

able unsat recog

secur Do

recog

it wa

and s child

dence

streng safe

father

by all

June,

It may happen and it does happen, that the mother becomes a dominating figure in the family, while the unmindful father occupies an insignificant and acquiescent role. It is understandable how important it is for a child to identify himself early with the father and develop properly, since a child is inclined to identify himself with the dominant, strong figure in the household.

The boy submits to the dominating person and should this be his mother, he falls in too readily with her wishes and takes on feminine attitudes. He tends to become a mother's boy, a "sissy." He may draw away from competitive sports and prefer quiet, domestic activities to the more active and boisterous ones of the typical child.

At bedtime father is a protector

Such submissive children are too often regarded as "ideal" children, for they cause no disturbance in the house. Very often they are made to act as servants rather than as children of the house. In extreme cases these children are unable to marry, or if they marry, prove unsatisfactory mates. "Mom-ism" is recognized as one of the causes of insecurity in men of today.

Down through the ages the father was recognized as the head of the family; it was the father who made decisions and saw that they were carried out. The children gave the father utmost confidence, believed in his unlimited strength, and felt that their destiny was safe in his hands. In those times the father had a true sense of values, and by all means a sense of humor; he was lively, high in his aims; he had a lot of time for his family and was ever ready to play a game. He tossed a ball or played horseshoes with his son, took him for hikes in the woods, or went fishing with him. He took the boy or girl on his knee and told tall tales from his life which the child loved for their exaggeration. For the proper development of the child a father must keep himself and his soul young enough to maintain direct contact and understanding with these youngsters. "What do you want to become when you grow up?" is a favorite question on radio and television today and the answers are funny rather than intelligent. A recent study made at the Catholic University revealed that only 41 per cent of the freshmen boys understood the type of work their fathers were doing. This failure on the part of the modern fathers explains why children entering adolescence have little idea of what the world has to offer them. If the mother has had a too-protective influence, the youth enters a competitive outside world with no preparation for finding his way.

The father should serve as intermediary between the world and the home. He should discuss with the young minds the happenings in the world and should answer patiently and understandingly the many questions his children ask him. How easy it is for the father to discuss politics in a bar for long hours, over several glasses of beer, and how impatient he gets if he has to converse five minutes with his own children.

There can be no question that the father and father-figure is and should be of utmost importance in the child's development. If the male role in the home is regarded as a secondary one, the father exerts little influence in the child's development during its early childhood. Yet, even before six months of life, the baby is able to acknowledge and recognize its father and between six and twelve months, a divorce in the family precipitates, as is well known, an emotional conflict in the infant.

The infant's learning, his whole emotional upbringing, is achieved through complete identification. Children sense the presence of the father and the positive tender feelings aroused in the play period are an essential factor in their ego development. The father who romps with the little child, sits on the floor and plays with its mechanical toys, mends a broken doll or shoots at a target, develops a rapport with the youngster that brings them together as part of a family unit. And both the father and the child profit from this feeling of oneness.

QUICKLY the little child reciprocates the father's love with an inspiring devotion. The son admires his strength and masculine prerogatives and the little girl coquettishly woos the father's affection: both children feel safe and secure. The children admire the virile pattern of the father who is with them only a small part of the day and seek this father's recognition and esteem. They both want the father's protection and guidance and the sound rapport that is established that is the beginning of a close and enduring friendship.

The presence of a wise and affectionate father gives to the child a sense of security, a control which directs him

Photos by Harold Lambert

Asleep at the switch is the father coming home from work thinking himself too fatigued to entertain his children or show interest in their welfare

June, 1953

er

a

to ıld

oed

tle ght less

was ind

k."

her

pily

ing

ord

the

that

GN

safely and within which protection he can adventure; an ideal to which he can strive. Close relationship with the father is naturally of first importance to the boy in his adoption to his social role in life and as a member of his sex. The girl finds ease and tranquil enjoyment in the presence of her father, the same ease and comfort which it is necessary for her to develop later in the company of the male sex, an important factor for the choice of the right mate.

Recently a tendency has developed to send children on vacation to summer camps at the same time that the father has his short vacation. I don't want to dispute the advantages of camp life; however, I want to stress that every parent, every mother, and especially every poor taste and plebeian, while lack of emotion is regarded as aristocratic and noble. One of my own patients, after his father's death, was deeply regretful that he never showed him any affection and could never remember having given him a kiss though he thought his father would have liked to be kissed after a long absence.

Children do not understand this unnatural repression of affection, being candid and open in all their thinking. They desire and need physical contact with persons they love. When children shy away from parents, there has been something wrong with the previous contact of the parents with the children. The child who is denied the opportunity to romp with his father and the baby who is denied his need for cudfather's arms comfort and security, while in his mother's were anxiety and insecurity.

Also, the importance of the father in the formation of a strong ego development in the child cannot be denied; it must be remembered that in the harmonious home the child's relationship is not to mother or father as separate entities; it is the totality of their relationship as parents. It is a shared relationship, a feeling of oneness, father, mother, child. A child should have the feeling that he can turn to the parents if the problem of living is too difficult,

Let me again emphasize that the father's interest in his children should not begin only when they are old enough to appreciate his contribution, such as an allowance, repair of a toy, help with homework, or as a help to avoid difficulties. The degeneration of the father's role into that of a tired, often dreaded nightly visitor has done much to make the child's identification with the father impossible. Too often the father is made to assume the role of policeman to his son. "You wait until your father gets home tonight," the mother threatens, "he will tend to you." Certainly the father should share in the discipline of the child, but it should be a thoughtful, fair judgment which he exercises. He should not uphold the child against the mother, but he should, when called upon, determine the necessary punishment. If the boy has broken a window with his ball, the cost of replacing the glass will be too heavy to take it all from the boy's allowance. The father will have to share in the loss. Even the mother can volunteer to forego a movie to help bear the cost. It then becomes a shared family payment of a carelessness.

HAVE tried to show you briefly that I parenthood must be a shared relation ship to the child, a shared responsibility. The child should be brought up to a feeling of being an individual part of a unity which is his strength and guide. It is a wise father who will direct his footsteps right. You probably all know the story of the man who went out of the house one winter's day through the deep unbroken snow. He walked a block, crossed over, and went another block and entered a building. His little son, coming out to play, saw the tracks of his father and stretching his little legs, put one foot after another into the footprints of his father and followed along. It was a frightened father sitting at a bar who saw the door open and his little son walk in.

Wrong notions of love and affection that can do a lifetime of harm are the result of fathers' denying their children family intimacy father should spend at least part of their vacations with the children, as this is the only time when the father is able to spend a whole day, or even one or two-weeks with his children. The best part of this is that the father enjoys this youthful relaxation with his children. It is a mutual exchange of spirited play.

I don't want to dwell on the difficulties which wrangling, quarrels, and to a more serious degree, broken homes and divorce precipitate. Rather, I like to express such interpersonal relationships as have a serious effect on children and which are readily observed. You have here the repressed and undemonstrative father who gives his children so little assurance of his regard that the baby and child feel unwanted and insecure.

There is a group in which any demonstration of affection is considered in dling will come to think of affection in an unhealthy light. He may develop a personality that puts the wrong emphasis on affection and seek it unwisely, or he may assume his parents' attitude of rigidity which unfits him for normal romance and proper intersocial relation-

Very often fathers are described with considerable injustice as being cruel, unreasonable, rough, ungentlemanly, and harsh. We sometimes must take a certain exception to this description. In my court experience I have seen a little boy cuddled against the breast of a hard-swearing, hard-talking father called "violently tempered and cruel" by the mother. However, the boy refused to go to his mother whose complacent smile illustrated her self-righteousness. This child knew that he found in his

DR. ROBERT P. ODENWALD is Director of the Child Center and assistant professor of psychiatry in the Department of Psychology and Psychiatry at the Catholic University of America.

36

THE SIGN

Tho BLE

of ac

brou

plays

50 w nomi

ious

some in m

the I

perfo

lacks

Erstw

ling e

an at an oc

room

sched

fect, a

those

this v

perfor

Smith

Sterlin

(RKO

June,

*Stage and * Screen

d

y, to of d, ne on en

of til he u." the be he the ald, cesken

reto The loss.

to cost.

pay-

that tion-sibil

ip to part

and ill di-

bably

went

s day

v. He went ilding.

y, saw

tching

nother

er and htened

w the

in.

tor or sor of hology sity of

SIGN

by JERRY COTTER

John Wayne saves the day for Charles Coburn in "Trouble Along the Way"

Reviews in Brief

Though often contrived and occasionally incredible, TROUBLE ALONG THE WAY manages to provide a fair share of adult-size entertainment. John Wayne is cast as a coach brought back from gridiron limbo to develop a team for a financially embarrassed Catholic college. Charles Coburn plays one of those incongruous padres Hollywood loves so well as the campus prexy who solves a problem in economics the unorthodox way. There are some genuinely hilarious scenes, others which are too saccharine for comfort, and some which indicate that the writers followed a pretzel path in making their hero's divorce and remarriage conform to the letter of the law. The stars give their customary slick performances with able assistance from Donna Reed, Sherry Jackson, and Tom Tully. (Warner Bros.)

Erstwhile actor Dick Powell has turned director with startling efficiency in SPLIT SECOND, a tense melodrama set in an atomic-age ghost town. It is a terse and powerful tale of an oddly assorted group which is trapped in a deserted barroom of Yucca Flats on the night before a test explosion is scheduled. At times it overreaches in striving for grim effect, and it isn't recommended for every adult. However, for those who do enjoy the hardhitting school of melodrama this will undoubtedly prove absorbing. Stephen McNally's performance as a hardened convict is superb, and Alexis Smith, Kieth Andes, Paul Kelly, Arthur Hunnicutt, Jan Sterling, and Richard Egan handle their roles skillfully. (RKO-Radio) HOUSE OF WAX is the first full-length feature in the stereoscopic style. This even has stereophonic sound as an added attraction, but despite the technical tricks it only serves to prove that the 3-D revolution is going to need more than gimmicks to usurp standard projection. The chairs which fly into the audience, the sound of voices seemingly coming from all parts of the theater, and the crackling of fire as a wax museum burns provide a certain novelty that the average audience is going to relish. The story used in this instance was selected to provide as many ghoulish thrills as you've ever writhed through in one session. The macabre becomes ridiculous after a time, and even polaroid glasses cannot disguise the clichés. As an indication of progress in the dimensional field, this is fine, but it lacks the promised value as an asset to realism. Novelty is one thing, solid progress another. This delivers on one score, but only hints at what must be done in the other. As for the "rollicking" adventures of a girl tagged as a potential victim by a mad wax-museum wizard, they defy description without the use of a polaroid typewriter ribbon. (Warner Bros.)

A few spurts of violence and brawling only serve to underscore the general dullness and inadequacy of THE WOMAN THEY ALMOST LYNCHED, another glance back at the fratricidal days of the Civil War. It wastes the talents of Joan Leslie, John Lund, Brian Donlevy, and Audrey Totter on an inconsequential tale of frontier town conflicts made even less attractive by the suggestiveness of a ludicrous saloon soiree. (Republic)

June, 1953

DREAM WIFE wastes time and talent in recounting a cliché-ridden bit of nonsense. The time is ours, the talent belongs to Cary Grant, Walter Pidgeon, Deborah Kerr, and Betta St. John, who should be in better surroundings. It gets out of hand in detailing one of those "sophisticated" comedies, which might better be described as moronic. Grant enacts his role of retarded man of distinction in his usual capering style, and Miss Kerr is called upon to play a State Department career-lady in a manner more Hollywood than Georgetown. Miss St. John is an Iranian oil princess whom Grant pits against his State Department true love, and Pidgeon does little but look debonair as a Potomac functionary. Let us hope that this is reserved for home consumption only. (M-G-M)

For the audience that never tires of standard brands, LAW AND ORDER is an acceptable Western. It has hues by Technicolor, heroics by Ronald Reagan, and the required reserve of fast gunplay and background scenery. If it doesn't quite measure up as a piece of movie art, it nonetheless fills a familiar bill quite competently. Dorothy Malone is an attractive heroine, while Preston Foster, Alex Nichol, and Barry Kelley stand by as the adherents of dark villainy. (Universal-International)

TITANIC is a touching re-enactment of the ill-fated maiden voyage of the 1912 luxury liner. When dealing with the factual aspects of the tragedy, the film is a stirring and suspenseful spectacle, handled with top technical skill. The scenes in which the majestic liner meets its icy doom are expertly conceived and developed. Less intriguing are the fictional passages dealing with such varied shipboard companions as two bored expatriates on the verge of divorce, an unfrocked priest returning from Rome, and the conventional young romance. The anguish of the passengers as families are separated forever has been strikingly depicted without overstressing hysteria. Barbara Stanwyck, Clifton Webb, Richard Basehart, Brian Aherne, Robert Wagner, Thelma Ritter, and Audrey Dalton manage to convey the emotions and fears of the diverse characters in splendid portrayals. This is a strong and unforgettable adult drama. (20th Century-Fox)

JAMAICA RUN is standard adventure fare, embellished with an underwater sequence, Technicolor photography, and a fine cast headed by Ray Milland. What it lacks is a plausible, fresh script and artful direction. Modern-day Jamaica is the backdrop for a story of decadent gentry being propelled out of a Caribbean plantation by a combination of inertia and Vat 69. A promoter with a resort-hotel gleam in his eye arrives to bargain for the land. Court scenes, a spectacular fire, and a subsea clash follow. Arlene Dahl, Wendell Corey, Patric Knowles, and Carroll McComas take up the slack with convincing performances. (Paramount)

con

wid

mo whi

wea

con

Day

wei

The

mus

brig

John

mira

a s1

sigh

mak

nati

Any

adva

ring

the

actin

eithe

prop

moti

few heav

large beca

It

only ploye

ployi

at ha

new

of th

Th

M

Family audience values are stressed in THE LONE HAND in which Joel McCrea appears as a mysterious newcomer in an area plagued by killings and robbery. His young son is disturbed when dad refuses to join the vigilantes out to snare the outlaws. In due course pater blushingly admits that he is a Pinkerton agent out to restore law and peace to Timberlane. McCrea shares the main honors with the beautiful Technicolor framing of the Colorado scenery. Jimmy Hunt, Barbara Hale, Alex Nicol, and Charles Drake make their secondary roles count. (Universal-International)

The elements of a good melodrama, sprinkled with adroit comedy scenes, are interestingly presented in NEVER LET ME GO. As an added dividend, the script offers an honestly sketched portrait of the Russian complex as it affects an American correspondent and the ballerina-bride he would take home. The Kremlin officialdom is coy about permitting its happy citizens to face the hardships of the West and refuses permission for her departure. With Clark Gable as the correspondent, you may be certain the situation will change. After storming the diplomat citadels in Washington and London without success, he embarks on an implausible, but exciting, maneuver to spirit his dancing lady out of Russia. He and the scriptwriter outwit the NKVD in nimble style. Despite the contrived plot there is a goodly quota of suspense for the family audience. Surprisingly, Gable and Gene Tierney play their roles in convincing manner. (M-G-M)

THE GIRL NEXT DOOR adheres rather closely to the Technicolor musical blueprint, but in those moments when it veers from formula it is a most enjoyable affair. The

Clifton Webb comforts young Harper Carter in "Titanic," gripping story of the ill-fated luxury liner of 1912

THE SIGN

June.

conflicts center around the disillusionment of a boy whose widowed father falls in love with a glamorous dancer who moves in next door. Dad is a comic strip artist, a fact which permits clever usage of cartoon sequences to bridge the weaker sections of the plot. Engagingly designed, acted with conviction by sprightly June Haver, Dan Dailey. Dennis Day, and young Billy Gray, it is a likeable bit of summerweight froth. (20th Century-Fox)

The obstacle course which the small town newspaper owner must hurdle proves as humorous as it is frustrating in IT HAPPENS EVERY THURSDAY. A basically amusing idea, brightened by Loretta Young's spirited performance and John Forsythe's impressive debut, it evolves into a minor miracle for these hours of Hollywood upheaval. With nary a spare dimension, a color camera or a chase sequence in sight, it becomes an entertaining reminder that good movies make technological gimmicks superfluous. (Universal-International)

The Theater Season

Any awards bestowed for artistic achievement or dramatic advance in the 1952-53 theatrical term would have a hollow ring. The season's bright spots were scattered and, for the most part, contributed by theater technicians in the acting, directing, and designing divisions.

Modern theater writing lacks spirit and substance; it either strives for slick sophistication or rides on strident propaganda. There is little insight, a minimum of spiritual motivation, and only rare flashes of dramatic power. With few exceptions it is not of professional caliber. It leans heavily on the creative abilities of a select coterie, with the large majority either disinterested, incapable, or disqualified because they will not take the pseudoliberal approach.

It is an unhealthy situation all around. One result is that only 10 per cent of our Actor's Equity membership is employed. Ireland's show folk are enjoying 100 per cent employment, and 50 per cent of those in Belgium are working.

The public will support good plays. Evidence of that is at hand in the enthusiasm playgoers display the minute a new offering receives favorable reviews. It is justifiably wary of the also-rans, with the result that a few productions enjoy an inflated success out of all proportion to their worth, and the remainder soon vanish.

Right now the ticket-buying public is supporting a musical called Wonderful Town in which Rosalind Russell makes a spectacular stage comeback; Arthur Miller's impassioned tract, The Crucible; Picnic, a well-staged, but sensual, drama by William Inge; a revival of Shaw's Misalliance; Gershwin's folk opera, Porgy and Bess; a brash and noisy musical called Hazel Flagg; a rather heavy-handed fantasy by Peter Ustinov which he has titled The Love of Four Colonels; the appearance of Shirley Booth in Arthur Laurents' unattractive Time of the Cuckoo; a British mystery, Dial M for Murder; and a genially fantastic comedy, My Three Angels.

None of these currently popular attractions offers much in the way of solid value. Few would survive the competition of the best in their class. Yet their success proves that the public has not abandoned the theater despite the lean years behind and, we fear, ahead.

Performance-wise, the season offered some consolation. Rosalind Russell in her musical clowning, Shirley Booth's poignant performance in a tedious comedy, Victor Moore's delightful return in On Borrowed Time, Arthur Kennedy's brilliant work in The Crucible, Tom Ewell in the comic vacuity of The Seven-Year Itch, Maurice Evans and Gusti Huber in Dial M for Murder, the gripping recitative performances of Tyrone Power, Judith Anderson, and Raymond Massey in John Brown's Body, the emergence of Geraldine Page with a beautifully modulated characterization in the desultory Midsummer, the haunting group performance by the Negro cast in Porgy and Bess, the superb pantomime of the Madeleine Renaud-Louis Barrault company from Paris, and the persuasive charm of Martyn Green, that perennially wonderful Savoyard. Two Hollywood stars, Katharine Hepburn and Bette Davis, offered distinctive examples of how not to act on any stage, at any time.

In previous years THE SIGN has recognized outstanding dramatic endeavor with its annual Drama Award. The Glass Menagerie, The Patriots, Spring Again, State of the Union, Othello, The Consul, were among those singled out for attention. Special awards have also been made to The Blackfriars Guild and The Catholic University Drama Department. No award is being made for the 1952-53 season.

Dan Dailey, Billy Gray, and June Haver in the musical, "The Girl Next Door"

June, 1953

d

as 11 ıs-

ut

in ly.

ng

he

en

Mr. Pinner recognized a woman who was apt to get what she wanted. There was only one thing for an avowed bachelor to do

FOR more years than he was beginning to care to count, Mr. Pinner had been afraid of women. Quite a few men will freely admit that they dislike women or don't understand them or prefer to give them a wide berth, but Mr. Pinner went further. They scared him. Partly this was due to the fact that they attracted him, as bright flies may attract even a wary fish. At Mrs. Carstairs, where Mr. Pinner boarded, a legend had grown up about him, that he was secretly loyal to some earlier and tragic love. The idea rather pleased Mr. Pinner when finally it reached him, not only because of its romantic content, but because he fondly imagined it had some protective value. While, being essentially a truthful man, he refused to confirm the legend in as many words, he saw no reason in letting it die, serving as it did so good a purpose.

It was shortly after this that Miss

Hedge came to occupy Room 3, on the first floor at the front of the house. This was Mrs. Carstairs' best room, if there was such a thing, for the whole place was rather less than second rate. Ordinarily Mrs. Carstairs palmed off any other vacant room on a newcomer before she came round to offering Number 3, which could always be put to profitable overnight use for tourists, but when Miss Hedge arrived there was no nonsense about it, as Mr. Pinner was privileged and slightly awed to witness.

Mrs. Carstairs' Millie had been cleaning Number 3 sketchily after an overnight occupancy and had, with indefensible carelessness of which she would certainly hear later, left the door open.

"I shall take 'this," Miss Hedge said. Mrs. Carstairs took a look at the room, at Miss Hedge, and then at Miss Hedge's steamer trunk now appearing on the shoulders of an expressman, and capitulated. It was a trunk so bright with labels from all manner of foreign and other parts that Mrs. Carstairs was for the moment dazzled if not disarmed.

"It'll be eighteen a week," she said.
"Sixteen," said Miss Hedge with gentle firmness, and indicated the notice on the wall giving rates, which Mrs. Carstairs had not managed to back against.

"Didn't I say sixteen?" Mrs. Carstairs was all innocence.

"You did not," said Miss Hedge blandly.

Passing by, Mr. Pinner lingered in the hallway, caught by the tension in the voices.

"No electrical appliances, you understand," Mrs. Carstairs said defiantly.

"Except reasonable ironing," replied Miss Hedge, sticking to the text. "Or laundry." Mrs. Carstairs was now fighting a retiring engagement.

THE SIGN

m

M

in 16 ha

ta

ILLUSTRATED BY HENRY HARTMAN

"Limited," amended Miss Hedge.

Mrs. Carstairs took another look at Miss Hedge and at the labels on Miss Hedge's trunk, and gave it up. Travel was a remarkable thing. She said as much.

Miss Hedge smiled.

The smile reached Mr. Pinner, into whom Mrs. Carstairs had now backed, and remained to transfix him in spite of Mrs. Carstairs' tart inquiry in passing, "And was there something you wanted, Mr. Pinner?"

W HAT he wanted was one more look at Miss Hedge, impeccable in blue, a hat neither aggressive nor reticent, attractively slanted to show hair that made him think of pulled taffy. He had seen nothing quite like it since as a very small boy he had made tentative advances to the little girl beyond the back fence and been slapped for his pains, to his great surprise and discomfort. His present boldness in hesitating a moment longer in the hallway was his undoing. Miss Hedge saw him.

She came right to the door of the 100m.

"Hello," she said. "I wonder if it would be too much trouble to help me shift this trunk."

It was while he was shifting the trunk that Mr. Pinner became aware of what manner of female this was. He had just dusted off his hands, and said, wanting to break the silence with reasonable conversation, "You've certainly been places!" when Miss Hedge began to laugh.

"I bought it," she confessed. "In an auction room. Just as it is. The labels came with it. I've never had the heart to take them off."

The thought, and the memory of the effect of the labels on Mrs. Carstairs, gave Mr. Pinner more than just a moment of shared humor. In his own room later, the dialogue he had overheard between the landlady and her new tenant kept recurring. A woman, this Miss Hedge, who knew her own mind, and was apt, he surmised, to get what she wanted.

Was that not the very kind a man should avoid? Still, one had to be polite, living in a house like this and frequently being obliged to pass Miss Hedge in the hallways, on the stairs, and of course at meals. It was not, he told himself, that she was so pretty. Attractive, yes. But when she smiled it did things to Mr. Pinner, most disquieting things. He soon had a terrible suspicion that he could, if he once allowed his defenses to crumble, fall in love with her. At times he was afraid he might do something hasty and even irreparable. At other times he was even more afraid that he had no chance with her at all. Wavering between these extremes,

ık

er

if id.

th

he

to ar-

lge

in ler-

re-

ext.

GN

as the days went by and Miss Hedge seemed permanently established in Number 3, his digestion threatened to be seriously impaired.

"You aren't eating," Mrs. Carstairs reproached him one night at what was called evening dinner. "I hope indeed there's nothing the matter with the food."

"Nothing," said Mr. Pinner quickly, embarrassed under an oblique glance from Miss Hedge, "nothing at all."

Nobody had ever said that to Mrs. Carstairs before, and even she seemed startled at this lapse in his customary veracity.

BUT that evening, Miss Hedge waited on the landing until Mr. Pinner overtook her.

"You really aren't looking well," she told him solicitously. "Don't you think, perhaps, you should get out a little more?"

As Mr. Pinner five-and-a-half days out of seven was out all day at the office of Clutterbuck & Thornberry, there could be only one meaning.

"I do rather stick around." he admitted. "But it isn't much fun going places alone."

places alone."
"In that case," said Miss Hedge, "why not ask someone to go with you?"

Mr. Pinner's laugh was an achieve-

"All right," he said, "I'm asking you." Her laughter, rather pleasantly he had to admit, mingled with his, making everything, as you might say, casual. "Where," she asked, "shall we go?"

Upstairs in his room a cold breath of reason chilled a little the happy fever of Mr. Pinner's excitement. What rash thing had he done now? Did not great oaks from little acorns grow?

At first, when Mr. Pinner and Miss Hedge went out together, to a movie or a show or even, occasionally, to dinner as if to escape the deadly routine of sausages and stews beyond which Mrs. Carstairs' imagination or purse rarely tan, a little kindly joking was bandied about; but like all things the habit became established and no one gave it much more thought. Mr. Pinner did overhear Miss Crump give it as her emphatic opinion, Miss Crump's opinions were always emphatic, that nothing would ever come of it.

"Mark my words," she told Mrs. Carstairs while paying her weekly board, "you mark my words, nothing will come of it. Nothing."

"Well," Mrs. Carstairs replied. "I'm sure I don't know." Mrs. Carstairs, except in matters of purely domestic economy, and indeed even then was soon out of her depth. She now floundered back to safer and shallower waters. "So long," she said. "as they behave themselves in my house and pay their board promptly, that's all I ask."

"Nothing!" repeated Miss Crump, not to be put off, and retired into her room. To overhear a conversation like this gave Mr. Pinner pause, as the saying is. Was Miss Crump right? And did he, or should he, feel relief—or despair?

How far had this thing gone; how far did he really wish it to go?

Glancing back over the whole affair. he could see that, while he and Miss Hedge got on quite admirably and even had promising tastes in common, they were, in an emotional sense, getting nowhere fast. He still called her "Miss Hedge": a score of times he had trembled on the edge of uttering the more tender word, "Dorothy," but drew back, sometimes with quick-witted irrelevance. "Dor-" he would begin, and then reach hastily for "Dorsetshire is one of the smaller English counties," or "Dormice hibernate in winter," or "Dorcas was a good woman," when Miss Hedge would look at him with her clear and lucid gaze and indulge in a kind of Mona Lisa smile. He supposed if he once got to it there would be reciprocation, and the idea of her calling him "Harold" gave him, even in remote anticipation, the sort of feeling you get on a roller-coaster, a sensation halfway between terror and ecstasy. On the other hand, it was extremely possible that she wished no greater intimacy than at present existed.

He began to see that this couldn't go on. Even his work was suffering. In the offices of Messrs. Clutterbuck and Thornberry, where ordinarily he was efficient even in an economy of motion, he now moused around, often making two motions do the work of one. Panic at last filled him. The whole thing, from that first fatal moment when he had taken his second long look at Miss Hedge's taffy-colored hair and assessed the general effect of her blue outfit, had been a ghastly mistake.

IT was then he made his great decision.

"I shall leave," he told himself, "I shall go away. A long distance away. This should never have happened to me."

In this he was inspired by the fact that the offices of Messrs. Clutterbuck & Thornberry overlooked the railway terminus; and though he had long since ceased to pay any attention to the almost constant clang and turmoil of the comings and goings, they now obtruded themselves again. Moreover, lunching at his usual haunt, the Diana Grill; Tony Galapos, Prop, right across from the railway terminus and a place to which on one memorable occasion he had escorted Miss Hedge, Mr. Morcambe, sharing his table, hinted at a possible opening in the Pacific coast branch. As Mr. Morcambe

LESLIE GORDON BARNARD, Canadian writer, has written fiction for many leading publications. He has also published a novel and two volumes of short stories.

THE SIGN

A

e

A

h

h

W

to br

V

sea

He

fac

if | ma

sigl

ulc

Th

stop

and

but awa

M

triu

conf

Jun

A

knew rather more about Messrs. Clutterbuck & Thornberry's minds than they did themselves, this seemed highly authoritative.

"If I were younger, Pinner," he said, "I'd jump at it. Now you . . ."

He left it in the air, whence Mr. Pinner snatched it, admitting his interest.

"I'll speak to Thornberry, if you like," offered Mr. Morcambe.

Why, yes, the word came back from Mr. Thornberry.

Mr. Pinner, of course. The very man. "We shall miss you, of course," Mr. Thornberry assured him, "and if you should change your mind for any reason, even at the last moment, we can arrange for someone else."

Mr. Pinner had no thought of changing his mind, but he kept his own counsel, and indeed told nobody. If Mrs. Carstairs got word, there was no telling what pound of flesh she might exact first. As for Miss Crump, once she got her teeth into this, she would worry it like a terrier shaking a rat. As for Miss Hedge? Ah, but how could he break it to her? If she took it very hard, he would be torn between going and staying; if she took it casually, he would be secretly but deeply hurt.

It was at dinner, when all assembled to do justice to Mrs. Carstairs' food, that he said, after a preliminary cough:

"I shall be leaving shortly."
They all stopped eating.

Miss Crump cried, "Leaving, Mr. Pinner?"

"Leaving?" echoed Mrs. Carstairs.

"Being sent," Mr. Pinner explained briefly. "West coast. Next Wednesday." "Well!" Mr. Scopes spoke for all,

"What do you know?"

d

ľ

to

at 80 ay

ng

he

of ow

er,

1112 ght

nd

ble

lge,

ble,

the nbe

GN

Mr. Pinner's glance traveled obliquely, searching for whatever expression Miss Hedge's face might hold. Miss Hedge's face held no expression worthy of the name. Evidently, thought Mr. Pinner, if he had said the Carpathians instead of the Pacific coast she would have remained calm and undisturbed. At sight of such disinterest, Mr. Pinner's ulcers responded.

T HIS was intolerable. He had been quite right in deciding to get away. The sooner definitely the better.

Later, in the upper hall, Mr. Scopes stopped him, pinning him with a rigid and accusing forefinger against the top button of his vest.

"I believe, Pinner, you're running away."

"From what?" Mr. Pinner blustered.
"Hat!" said Mr. Scopes, and went on.
Miss Crump, coming by, smiled the triumphant smile of a prophet duly confirmed by events.

Almost at her heels came Miss Hedge, who stopped, said breezily, "When did you say you were going? Wednesday? Well, good luck."

Just like that.

He packed angrily. For two days he packed, his things at the office, his worldly goods here at Mrs. Carstairs'. He was packed far too early, and checked and rechecked; and now on the last night of all gave one more over-all check up, closing his suitcases and locking them with terrible finality, feeling his keys, his glasses, the tickets and reservations placed carefully in the inner pocket of his suit jacket, now hung over the back of a chair until he had got his luggage toted downstairs.

Nothing left to do now, but to say good-by. And suddenly he seemed to see qualities even in Miss Crump, Mr. Scopes, Millie, of course, who was always nice to him, and Mrs. Carstairs herself. To leave them, and the others, forever. When that was accomplished he felt limp. But there was still Miss Hedge.

He had left her to the last.

"Well," said Miss Hedge, "so you're really going. I had an idea that in the end you might change your mind."

Her cheerfulness was shattering.

But Miss Hedge had not yet done her worst. Now, glancing at her wrist watch, she said, "If you don't go, you may miss your train," and as if she were a—a sister or something, she shooed him to his room, hustled him downstairs twice with his bags, finally snatching his jacket from where it hung on the back of the chair and helping him on with it. "Happy landing," she called after him with the same horrible cheerfulness, and Mr. Pinner went heavily down the stairs with the last of his luggage.

At that, Miss Hedge was quite right. He was so late the redcap at the station adjured him to hurry, thus joining in the conspiracy to waft him away; and he pushed the trolley with Mr. Pinner's worldly possessions hastily before him to the gate. "Your ticket," he reminded Mr. Pinner, who reached in his pocket for it, fumbled, went blank. This pocket? That pocket?

"Bound to be there," the redcap said, helpfully. "Ninety times out of a hundred it is."

Mr. Pinner, it seemed was one of the NUMBLY he saw the gates close, heard the train rumble out. Staring disconsolately at his luggage stranded like himself, he had only one comfort—that he hadn't attempted to check any of it. He and it were at least together, one and indivisible.

But now what should he do?

The mere idea of returning to Mrs. Carstairs', and facing them all again after what were, perhaps, leavetakings of too affectionate and overemotional an order, struck a chill into him. As for facing Miss Hedge?

"No," he said aloud, "never."

He would have the redcap park his things in the parcel room and, with only an overnight bag for companionship, go seek some highly anonymous room for the night.

This accomplished, he quitted the station concourse, crossed the street, and the sight of the Diana Grill, Tony Galapos, Prop. cheered him slightly. He could at least have a cup of coffee; and at this time of night nobody of his acquaintance, certainly not Morcambe or any of the fellows from Clutterbuck & Thornberry, would be there to witness his shame—a man supposed to be on a train and not on that train.

The moment he was inside he regretted it. Here he had, on one still memorable occasion, brought Miss Hedge, and the memory of it rose to haunt him. Indeed, he deliberately avoided so much as a glance in the direction of the table where they had sat, but, taking an inconspicuous stall, ordered coffee moodily, drumming with his fingers a small, futile tattoo with his fingertips.

The coffee came, Mr. Pinner lifted it to his lips, and on the fourth sip felt sufficiently strengthened to look around.

It was fortunate that he had set the Guilty as Charged

► Three Soviet citizens who had somehow survived the purges were comparing notes in a camp in Siberia.

"I am here," said the first, "since 1929, for calling Karl Radek a counter-revolutionary."

"And I," said the second, "since 1937, for saying that Radek was not a counter-revolutionary."

"And I," said the third, "am Karl Radek."

Father Mathew Record

June, 1953

cup down. The only thing that now dropped was his jaw.

There, at the very table where they had sat on that memorable occasion, was Miss Hedge, just taking her seat.

The mere physical phenomenon was incredible enough; but it was only when Mr. Pinner allowed himself to plumb deeper that he came up with an amazing possibility which, the more he thought of it, seemed the only possible explanation.

This was a sentimental pilgrimage.

Miss Hedge had not been so casual about his leaving after all. Deep within her, hidden from his eyes, was a sense of loss. She had come here to mourn his going, to renew memories.

Everything inside Mr. Pinner seemed to collapse at once, crushed between a wild delight at the surmise and an anguish of embarrassment at being a witness to her secret grief. He had seen, was seeing, what undoubtedly his eye was not supposed to see. It was almost as if he had returned to witness his own obsequies. Under such circumstances what should he do? Could he rush across, as a wild impulse directed him to, and carry the situation off with a gay, "Look who missed his train?" or "Guess who?" or some other lightly coined

Like many a man in a similar situation, Mr. Pinner did nothing. He let Nature take her course, but do what he would his eyes demanded freedom to glance at Miss Hedge. If he had kept his nose, so to speak, in his coffee cup, there is no telling how or when the showdown, if any, might have come, or whether he would have managed to sneak away, unobserved and shaken to his depths. But to keep his eyes away from Miss Hedge was asking too much. She was wearing a blue dress on which, in a bold moment, he had dared to compliment her. Her profile was set at an angle different from that which he was ordinarily and daily familiar; and the slight tilt of her nose made her look a little like a schoolgirl from whom one might expect at any moment an attractive impertinence.

SO struck was he by Miss Hedge's attractions that he openly stared and at length, putting to new proof the theory that if you stare long enough at another person that person will look at Miss Hedge looked.

If she was startled, as he was certain she must be, at the sight of him here in the flesh when his body should have been sliding westward along bands of steel, she kept her emotion well in hand. It was a precarious moment. One look of distress, of distaste, or even embarrassment, and he would have fled in-

Babes in Hollywood

► A Hollywood rivalry between two onetime sirens of the screen has existed since silent picture days. At a recent gathering, they found themselves seated side by

"I remember that movie you made in 1930," said one. "But I didn't see you in your first success. I was in the kinder-garten."

"You were?" the other exclaimed. And then, sweetly: "I didn't know you had been a schoolteacher!"

-Rosalie Hull

continently, steering an apologetic course near enough only to murmur, while in flight, "Missed the train. Going in morning!

But, instead, a faint smile, you might almost say an agitated smile, toyed with Miss Hedge's lips. It was a smile that clearly said, "Come over and tell me about it."

Abandoning his coffee, Mr. Pinner rose, walking toward Miss Hedge's table a little as he supposed a man might do if he were in motion during sleep.
"Hi," said Miss Hedge, easily. "Sit down."

Just like that.

Mr. Pinner sat down. "I-I missed my train," he said. It was a half-truth and he was uncomfortably aware that Miss Hedge was waiting for more. "Got there," he said, "and couldn't find my tickets." He made small futile motions with his fingers as if to suggest the legerdemain by which this must have been accomplished, this flight of his transportation.

"Oh?" It was amazing how much, and yet how little, Miss Hedge got into that word. There was, he was sure, emotion in it; and yet some curious restraint. But her eyes went further. They said more. They said so much that Mr. Pinner was startled; and, floundering for a tremendous moment, he struck bravely toward the truth as a swimmer out of his depth might head for a desirable

"Miss Hedge," said Mr. Pinner, hesitated for an awful instant, then said fiercely, "Dorothy Hedge, will you marry me?"

"Yes," said Miss Hedge.

When breath returned to Mr. Pinner's body, and the walls and tables in the Diana Grill stopped whirling, Mr. Pinner heard himself saying, "How terrible if I hadn't missed the train. Why, all this-why . . ." He cupped his hands to hold the inexpressible. In imagination he lay in a curtained berth while the locomotive that steadily multiplied the miles between him and Miss Hedge wailed its melancholy in the night. It was unnerving. By so narrow a margin. And here he was, and here she was; both wrapped up in a luminous miracle. But beyond the miracle lay practical affairs.

He said, "What-what about the West?"

"I'd love it," Miss Hedge said.

"We could be married"-the word almost stuck in Mr. Pinner's throat-"either before, or when we got there."

C

O

g

SC

m pr

ne

th

res

fai

the des

IR

car

Ch

and nev

a to

we

sign

aro

up,

resu

thei

she

hon

Eng expe

that the

In

auth

in A

June

"Either," agreed Miss Hedge promptly. They sat and gazed into each other's eyes again; Miss Crump, that now confounded prophet, wouldn't have believed it. Mr. Scopes would no doubt have winked, and said, "Ha!" As for Mr. Pinner, he was now properly embarked on an emotional roller coaster, with a new, sharp dip every time Miss Hedge looked at him from under her taffy colored hair.

FINALLY he got near enough to the ground to shake his head again over this happy trick of fate.

"If," he said, "if it hadn't been for my losing the tickets . . ." Suddenly he began to laugh. "Wouldn't it be funny," he said, "if I found I had them after all," and he started a new search. It was at this moment that he saw a change come over Miss Hedge, a vacillation between the firm briskness he had once feared and a most likeable and appealing timidity. And then some composite of it grew in her face.

"I think, Harold," she said, taking his name on her lips for the first time, "you should know now. I just-just couldn't let you-get away.'

Staggered, Mr. Pinner saw what he saw. From the depths of Miss Hedge's handbag, it came. From the depths, also, of Miss Hedge's guile. His transportation! The missing tickets. Women, he thought, women. And this one, to whom he had so guilelessly latched.

"So?" Mr. Pinner said. "From my pocket.'

"Yes," Miss Hedge said.

She smiled. Not a very firm smile, but bright, luminous. And she looked at him-the simile suddenly struck Mr. Pinner-as if he were a special bit of luggage with gay labels on it.

"Well," said Dorothy Hedge, "do you want to make something of it?"

"Yes," Mr. Pinner said, "I do."

44

THE SIGN

Moman to Moman

by KATHERINE BURTON

"Let the Child Decide"

TO TALK CRITICALLY of modern education is a dangerous thing to do, but the years make one fearless. When some time ago I dared to do it on this page, I received some very harsh comments but also quite a few bouquets, which showed I was not alone in objecting to that variety of education known as progressive in the public schools, a method which in some of its phases produces fine results but in others brings horrendous ones. At that time I was hoping children would learn to spell, surely a simple hope, and one which I share with many business men who have to deal with progressive typists.

The other day I was talking with a friend, for years the principal of a really "super" school of progressive bent, one where the child decides the day and year when he is going to learn to read. I mentioned that one of my grandsons had had difficulty in learning to read in another school and that then a fine remedial reading teacher came to the school for a time and he was put in her group. Within a month he was able to do actual reading. "Ah," said the principal with pride when I finished, "you see he was ready for it then and not before."

Only the system wins, never the good teacher in the superprogressive education, and I think this is its great weakness; though they insist the older systems were too harsh, this system somehow seems to me harshest of all. To load all responsibility on the child is surely not true kindness, even if the system is based on kindness. Is this method of laissezfaire really right for the young child? The lovely classrooms, the books full of pictures, the desks that are free-moving, the little minds that must be made as free-moving as the desks-is this last, in the end, fair to the child?

Freedom from Neatness

I READ RECENTLY a newspaper interview that seemed to carry this all to a sort of grand finale on Freedom for the Child. We all want for him freedom from fear, of course, and freedom from hunger and the rest, but here is something new-freedom from neatness. A London child specialist-not a teacher, I hasten and am happy to add-informs us that we should let children be untidy, that parents ought to resign themselves to put up with the mess the youngsters make around the house. Don't ask the little darlings to clean it up, she warns, the implication being that the psychological results would be disastrous to the young ego.

"We are wasting, our breath and energy trying to alter them," she says calmly, "until they want to do it." And she adds consolingly that when they grow up and have a home of their own neatness will suddenly come to them.

I was surprised to find this bit of nonsense uttered about English children instead of our own, for in that country one expects children to be bossed rather than be bossy. Maybe that is what is wrong there today: they are not teaching the hard truth that one must clean up the mess one makes.

In our own land, Mrs. Judith Krames, who is an American authority on the young, said about this English statement, in American phraseology easy to understand, "She's half baked." Then she added this truly remarkable statement, fruit evidently of pondering on the oddities of modern thinking on education, "People have got so confused giving children freedom. And freedom for what? For going crazy?"

This is perhaps not the involved and studious language of the trained child psychologist, but it is a breath of common sense in our sometimes too Dewey-clouded air. It strikes home to the puzzled parent who has been half convinced that if she even reproves Junior for his conduct she is going to blight his youth, make his marriage impossible, and maybe even affect his children.

I am very certain that few of our teachers would plump for this idea of disorder among the young in material things. I have never yet been in a school room, no matter how progressive, that does not look neat. Even if the education has occasional cobwebs, rooms don't. Teachers like neat rooms-and I am very sure they don't do the picking up.

Untidiness of Mind

MAYBE THIS will be the next step among those grown heady with the slogan of keep-the-child-free. He will not be asked to pick up things unless he wants to, just as he is allowed to learn to read when he feels ready for it. And last week I read another disquieting thing: blackboards may no longer be black as they now are. It is too unsettling for childish nerves to see so dreary a color, so brighter ones are suggested and since white chalk would then not show up well, there will be colors to harmonize. To my suspicious mind this is an idea compounded of two things-teachers too alert for the newest fad and persuasive salesmen and admen who dream up something new to hold their jobs.

What we need is blacker blackboards, if anything, and tougher schedules and less pastel thinking. We need to realize that children should be taught, in the old, far-off way of saying it, to toe the mark.

Recently in the Herald Tribune, personnel managers wrote of the high school graduates who come to them for jobs that "practically none can do simple fractions or use a dictionary, because they are not sufficiently familiar with the order of letters in the alphabet, and many do not know how to spell." Some added bitterly that were it not for the many jobs at present open and the need to fill them, some of these graduates would have to wait a long, long time for Somehow this untidiness of mind ties up with an untidiness of surroundings. And now I am going to quote with joy some opinions of forthright American mothers on the latter subject. "When she'd got to be ten I told her I'd finished hanging up after her," said one, "and it worked." And another mother said even more simply, "I just didn't pick up after him. I kept after him." "The thing becomes such a habit they do it automatically when they are older. I've seen it work," said a third.

So even if schools no longer demand neatness of mind in the young, it is obvious that mothers demand neatness of environment. Now if they would only speak up in the halls of learning as well as in the halls of home, who knows what might come of it!

June, 1953

r

1

ly

d

W

10 a

he

nd

mnis

ou

n't

he ge's

ths,

ıns-

en,

to my nile

ked

Mr.

t of you

IGN

Al Collins. Is he radio's No. 1 disc jockey?

Heavy fan mail doesn't bother Mr. Muggs

by JOHN LESTER

Color and the Queen

The color TV situation is on the fire again. But I don't intend to go into the matter at any length here. This whole thing began very simply, but crosses and double-crosses developed until it's now pretty well scrambled. The only thing that can be said for certain for the future is that recent turns of events have hurried the coming of commercial color. It may now reach the market in a year or so, or it may be delayed indefinitely.

Either way, don't worry about it, because color will not make obsolete your regular black-and-white receiver.

If no definite date can be set for color, one can and has been set for the coronation of Queen Elizabeth II, of England, June 2. This will be one of the big broadcasting events of the year and will be radio-ed "live" to all parts of the world.

Television coverage of the coronation won't be "live," although it might have been. Films will be rushed aboard fleets of some of the fastest jet planes in the world for whizzing to New York and showing to America's millions of viewers only a few hours after being shot. They'll be developed in flight.

There was talk some weeks ago of televising the coronation "live," as you may remember, and many people even in the industry considered such talk a device for publicity hounds or crackpots.

Actually, transoceanic television isn't as far-fetched as it may have sounded and it's entirely possible that the coronation could have been picked up "live," although it would have cost considerable preparation and money.

The first transoceanic telecast, in fact, took place about twenty-five years ago when John Baird telecast a woman in his London studio so perfectly that she was completely recognizable in New York.

Two years later, the General Electric Company decided to top Mr. Baird and sent a picture from its Schenectady laboratories all the way to Australia and back in one-eighth of a second!

Museum, Monkey, Music

There is much promise for TV's future, in current negotiations being completed between CBS-TV and the Museum Of Natural History for the first regularly scheduled series to originate in the various rooms and exhibits of the Museum, making available to the viewing public at close range the many wonders of this outstanding institution. This looks like a first-class series, the educational and entertainment advantages of which it is impossible to estimate.

Until this series begins, which should be fairly soon, we'll have to content ourselves with the only thing reasonably new on TV, a stir being caused by a yea Mu seri Day wee ann hap live pro P rath ing ple anvi A li was tent mar thin T ing he's 0 ing mon but ticul Stati in th trend let n ning.

THE SIGN

In

cally,

thirty thent

whon

of Ne

disc

Collin

in hi

top a

220 1

intell

prieto

son, a tion to in jazz

listene

his pl

tribut

thorou

at WI

into 1

suede

on the hired

some o

Pub

telecas

furious

June,

An

If t

Ic

year-old chimpanzee named "Mr. Muggs," who is stealing the NBC-TV series Today from under its human star, Dave Garroway, and earning $250 a week in the meanwhile. Garroway, unannoyed by the theft, says he won't be happy until "Mr. Muggs" learns to deliver news copy while the program is in progress.

Personally, there are many things I'd rather watch than a monkey but, judging by Mr. Muggs' fan mail, many people would rather watch monkeys than anything else, which is their privilege. A little boy in Roanoke, Va., for one, was watching the chimp perform so intently the other day his mother remarked: "He knows how to do more things than you do, doesn't he?"

The youngster answered, without taking his eyes off the TV screen: "Sure, he's been well trained and I haven't!"

On radio, more serious things are being done and, as reported here several months ago, the programming swing, but big, is to music of all kinds, particularly the classical and semiclassical. Statistics show interest in classical music in this country has leaped about 1500 per cent in the last ten years. It is this trend that radio is wisely following but, let me predict, the trend is only beginning.

El "Jazzbo"

In this general field of music, specifically, at the jazz level, there lives a thirty-two-year-old devotee of the authentic stuff named Al "Jazzbo" Collins, whom several publications and millions of New Yorkers consider the No. One disc jockey of the nation.

p

n

go

in

he ew

ric

nd

ab-

nd

V's

eing

the

the ori-

bits

01

the

in-class

tain-

ossi-ould

ntent

nably

by a

SIGN

I can't go along with that, although Collins must be considered the top man in his specialized field, or close to the top at the very least. Bearded, a stocky 220 pounds, good-natured, easy-going, intelligent, sensitive, Collins is the proprietor of one wife, one ten-year-old son, and several foreign cars, in addition to a sprawling collection of the best in jazz recordings with which he delights listeners to Manhattan's station WNEW.

If there is any simple explanation of his phenomenal success, it can be attributed to his love of his work and his thorough knowledge of it.

A native New Yorker, Collins arrived at WNEW via Salt Lake City, walked into the boss's office in beard, green suede shoes, a pom-pom bow tie, and lay on the floor for an interview. The boss hired him "only because I was afraid some other station might if I didn't."

In Brief

Publicity given the atomic bomb via telecasts of recent tests has created a furious demand for home Geiger Counters among various retailers handling this particular item. Prices range from $19.45 to $2,000. . . . TV casting directors are combing actors lists for chubby guys who resemble Malenkov for use on documentary and spy shows. . . . Keye Luke, "Charlie Chan's" No. One son for many years, inked for a Chinese disc jockey show in New York. . . . The Sign Of Zorro will begin filming for TV this summer. . . . Ed Gardner, long-time proprietor of Duffy's Tavern, spent so much time in Puerto Rico ducking high taxes on the mainland, he decided to stay there and go into politics. . . . A Bob Hope-Bing Crosby fan in San Diego is named Hope Crosby. Honest, . . . England's Queen Elizabeth is installing thirty-five TV sets in Buckingham Palace for her June Coronation, so the household staff can watch. . . . A west coast TV station programs wrestling at 11.30 A.M. for housewives, and another at 2:30 P.M. for swing-shift workers. S'help me! . . . All four major networks are now bidding for Harry Truman's services as a commentator, but CBS still has the inside track. . . . Thomas Mitchell would like to star in a "George M. Cohan Theatre Of The Air" from New York. Preferably on TV, of course. . . . Groucho Marx recently turned down another fat offer to appear in a night club with: "Any time a drunk can get bigger laughs than I'm getting, I don't want the job." . . . Shirley Temple ready to make a comeback via TV. . . . Jim Hope, brother of the comic, will soon publish the complete story of the Hope family, titled Mother Had Hopes. . . Just for the record: When the Adelphi Theatre, from which Bishop Sheen does his weekly Dumont telecasts, reopened some time ago after changing its name from The Craig Theatre, its first show was The Lord Blesses The

- 1. DANCING MASTER—Ray Malone, star of ABC-TV's "Talk of the Town," versatile and talented dancer and choreographer.
- 2. HOLD THAT POSE—Neil Hamilton, host and emcee of ABC-TV's "Hollywood Screen Test," shows fledgling actor how it's done.
- 3. TV's FIRST STAR?—Gene Autry made his TV bow in 1932 in a Chicago store window, demonstrating the wonders of television.
- "MAMA" AND PAPA—Peggy Wood and Judson Laire are parental stars in CBS-TV's "Mama," wholesome series on a Norwegian-American family.

June, 1953

A city reveals not only material wealth but also educational, cultural, and medical resources

Good Old Big City

Is your dream a country home? Then you can have it! Says this man who tried it out. His best day was when he left. The city is full of such men

by HARRY SCHLEGEL

I T was late, the city room was nearly deserted, and Andy and I had some time to kill. Andy and I talked; the talk finally drifting around to the days when we were kids.

"I grew up in a small town," said Andy, "and, boy, there's nothing like it." A little condescendingly, he added: "'Course, you wouldn't know about that, coming from a big town. You really missed something."

I wasn't prepared at that moment for a definitive discourse on the relative merits of the small town versus the big city, so my defense consisted of a few feeble mutterings that my youth hadn't been entirely misspent. "Yessir," nostalgically concluded Andy, as he reached for his hat, "that was the life!"

I thought about it on the way home in the subway. Lord knows, the subway at 4 A.M. is enough to make any man agree enthusiastically with the Andys. But still, I believed then and I believe now that the smalltown boyhood of song and story is probably another one of those myths we Americans love to create. We hayen't originated one about big city boyhood, but an awful lot of people seem to thrive midst all the steel and concrete, and to like it, too.

I'm one of them, and frankly I'm not a bit unhappy that as a kid I tramped cement pavements instead of pine-needled woods, or fished for pennies through a subway grating instead of smelts through the ice.

In my time I've heard a lot of superior talk from these transplanted rustics. (Why, to hear some of them, we're all reformed juvenile delinquents here in the big town.) And as far as this native is concerned, I've had enough. And I'll tell you why. Because I've lived and worked in the sticks—and, brother, you can have it.

First, let's talk about my days as a kid. It seems sometimes to almost surprise these visiting-firemen-come-to-stay, but we even played games here in the city; games you might have heard of, like football, baseball, and hockey.

All right, so the football was actually touch-tackle, and we dodged more cars than we did guys on the other team. O. K., the baseball was really stickball, and the hockey a rollerskate version played on asphalt rather than ice. But does sport build character only in farm boys?

I'll admit that, come summertime, we couldn't walk down to "the ol' swimmin' hole," which is standard equipment for all small towns, (I've seen

THE SIGN

th

mi du if Ho sno

of s ing will I ities Cath

which tually coun school lic g

tende

one or two of them, by the way, but I was always too polite to mention that they looked like oversized mudpacks.) No, we just got on an open-air trolley, or the elevated, and took a pleasant, 45-minute ride down to the best swimming hole of all—the Atlantic Ocean.

But all play makes even us city boys dull boys, and you must be wondering if we didn't have our counterpart of Horatio Alger's barefoot urchin. You know, that tiny but tireless tyke who, the story goes, used to milk half a herd at the age of six without taking a deep breath. Why, sure we did. Only we delivered newspapers, or shoveled snow, or cut lawns, or pushed a cartful of groceries around after school.

That was for shavers, though. Once you got into your teens, you had the chance summers to pick up some kind of steady job as an office boy or messenger. Big money in it, too, at least to us—twelve, thirteen, fourteen dollars a week. Enough, anyway, so that by the time you went back to school you had maybe thirty, forty bucks socked away.

There's another side, though, to growing up in the city, and on this one I will brook no argument. I mean school.

I insist that we had better opportunities for an education. There were Catholic parochial and high schools, which are few in small towns and virtually nonexistent in many areas of the country. There were other private schools. And lastly, there were the public grade schools, like the one I attended. Better schools, according to the educators, than the hick-town variety, because the big-city school systems offer more in the way of material and professional rewards and therefore attract the best teaching timber.

Then there was high school. Most whistle-stops have one—like the place I'm going to describe to you. The more fortunate have two. In New York, there were academic high schools, commercial high schools, vocational high schools, private high schools, and Catholic high schools. I went to one of the latter.

When it came time for college, I picked another big town, Washington. I wouldn't even begin to pretend that I was any different from most other freshmen, and that I immediately assimilated all the historical and cultural advantages that Washington offers. But a little of the nobility and grandeur of our past did sort of seep into my consciousness (by osmosis, probably) because I was there, and I doubt that exposure to the higher arts in a rahrah college town would have done as much.

After college, when I came back to New York, it was very nearly the bottom of the depression. But somehow, there was a job, and while it paid only $15 a week, they weren't Truman dollars. Fifteen dollars stretched then. It bought some of the theater, the opera, the movies fairly frequently. And the libraries and the museums—are there better in the country?—were still free.

The beaches were still there, the public-park tennis courts were yours

HARRY SCHLEGEL is a rewrite man on the staff of the New York Daily News. He has published sports and mystery fiction in various magazines.

for the playing, and a season permit on a municipal golf course cost §5. In short, it was all there then as now. And if you didn't have the money one week, it would all be there the next, or whenever the wallet was a little thicker.

But this piece never would have been written if I hadn't had a chance one day to go to work as a reporter and general editorial factorum in a little southern town. It was there that I got a close look at the life bucolic.

I think this town (let's call it Anathema, because that's what it was to me) gave me a wonderful opportunity to put this whole way of life under a microscope. It was a county seat of about 7,500 souls, set down in the midst of rich farm land. A pants factory with two hundred employees gave it a slight gloss of industrialism.

There were a few wealthy people, a few po' white trash, with most everybody else in the middle. There were five Protestant churches, one Catholic church served by a circuit-riding priest, two grade schools, one high school, one movie house, and a country club.

THERE were, in Anathema, several things to do. You could go to the movies. But if the picture was a turkey, you didn't go to the movies, unless you went to the next town, thirty-two miles away. You could play bridge, as a lot of folks did. Or you could drink, as most everybody in Anathema did.

This despite a beautiful fiction that nobody drank, because the law said it was against the law to sell strong drink. In theory this was fine, but also hypocritical. Because just outside the town limits flourished the roadhouses, serving the best of bourbon to the rich, the poor, and everybody in the middle. (With coke as a chaser, which should give you some idea of the respect these Confederates had for good corn whisky.)

I remarked on this limited field of entertainment about a month after I arrived in Anathema. "Oh, but go out to the country club," I was told. "You'll have fun out there." So that Saturday night, I went to the country club.

And what were they all doing, these people who'd had the very best of a smalltown upbringing? Why, they were playing bridge and drinking bourbon with coke chasers!

But surely it must have been friendly in Anathema, you say. That's what evcryone says about small towns. If you mean that everyone said hello to everyone else, I guess it was friendly. But if

There may be no spring lakes nor wavy trees, but there is still sunshine, happiness, and crystal water, city-supplied, right at the front door

June, 1953

00

en-

ad

115-e're

ere this igh.

ved

her,

as a e-toe in eard

ckev.

cars

eam

chall,

rsion

But

farm

ie, we swim-equip-

seen

SIGN

you mean that there was the warm spirit of acceptance and liking which I call true friendship, I say an emphatic no!

You had to come from Anathema to belong, and I came from New York. The fellows and girls of my age, in the mid-twenties, were civil, but not civil enough to ask me out to one of the barbecues or to a fish fry at the lake south of town.

You might point out that I'd only been there a few months, and that it takes more time than that. Well, let me tell you about the Ohioan and his wife, who'd been in Anathema for three years.

He was the manager of the largest supermarket; a hardworking, intelligent, cheery man. His wife, the mother of two children, told me she'd looked forward eagerly to the rich, full life the Anathemas of this world are supposed to offer.

"I'm still waiting," she said one day. "Somehow, we still seem to be looked on as transients. George has his work, and it doesn't seem to bother him much. But I'd like to be in a bridge club or the garden club. And it really hurts when the children come home from school and tell me about the big birth-day party they haven't been invited to."

I FOUND that being a stranger hurt my paper. We were a daily, and the other two sheets were weeklies, staffed by local boys. After awhile, I caught on to the lact that some stories were being withheld from me, so that one or the other of the weeklies would get the first break.

One particularly good yarn concerned a Washington plan to build a dam not far outside of town. It meant a lot to the town, and we would have given it a big play. The Chamber of Commerce secretary was the first to get wind of it, and he gave an exclusive to one of the

My boss jumped on me, and I didn't blame him. I decided to have a showdown with the secretary, a bland and paunchy windbag. He assured me solemnly that no offense had been meant; that he had intended to give me the story along with the weekly, but hadn't been able to get hold of me.

I didn't believe him, but I had to accept his explanation. But, as an old Chicago editor once said: "If you wait long enough, everybody is bound to pass under your window." I waited, and my man passed, about a month later.

His nephew got arrested in the town square one Saturday as a common drunk. That fact was to be daily noted in our Monday police roundup. About an hour before the paper went to press, Old Windy came steaming in.

"You're not mentioning my nephew's name, of course," he said, implying that we were all brothers in the lodge. Silently, I handed him a proof of the story, which merely recorded the tippling nephew's name, but made no mention of the family connection.

"Now see here . . ." he began threateningly. I got mad. I told him I could give it a lot different play, by putting nephew's name in the first paragraph, and dwelling at length on uncle.

While we were arguing, the publisher walked in, and listened both sides out. He decided we'd run the story as originally planned. I couldn't resist as the secretary lumbered out in a rage.

"Remember the dam, Mr. Caldwell," I said sweetly.

That was one pleasant moment in Anathema. But the best was the day I got a wire from the editor of a paper closer to home, offering me a job. I loved Anathema that day. I loved it, too, the day I climbed aboard a train and turned for a last look as we slid out of the station.

And that's the way I want to remember Anathema, and all the other Anathemas—leaving them! I don't want to go back; I want to stay here, in the big city.

Matter of fact, I think most of the boys from Anathema feel the same way. Else why do they come to the big city?

COMMENCEMENT

by PATRICIA MacGILL

The broad world lay before me, yet afraid
I paused, half-hesitant, beside the gate
And childlike begged the rushing hours to wait,
Implored new life for flowers born to fade.
Protesting, yearning backwards, there I stayed,
When swift and sudden, courage through me flowed;
I knew myself a pilgrim on the road
By God first planned, by saints and heroes made.

O foolish fear! O greater Love divine
Which once, uncomprehended, lit our night,
Which gave the hungry living bread and wine,
Which looked on us with tender, human sight,
Now give me strength, now shine that I may see,
Now let me live, not I, but Thou in me.

THE GARDENER

by HERBERT A. KENNY

He could talk to flowers. Do you understand me?

He could talk to flowers, as I to you.

He could talk to flowers and they understood him;

And he could hear them talking, too.

Talking to him and to each other Stalk to blossom and blossom to bud.
He could talk the talk of flowers,
And you thought nobody ever could.

I asked him if there was any word
That I might know that they knew too.
And he thought a while before he told me:
God, he said, was a word they knew.

of

m

th ize

ar

ha

h

MEXICO. Student from UNESCO center explains advantages of modern methods to fellow villagers

Mexican woman burdened by primitive methods is helped by UNESCO aides

A Catholic Looks at UNESCO

Photos courtesy of UNESCO

In 1531, an obscure priest began a program of education among backward peoples. In 1951, a UN counterpart revived his ideal by ALBA ZIZZAMIA

N 1531, Father Vasco de Quiroga settled among the Tarascan Indians of Patzcuaro, Mexico, and started an intensive educational campaign. He mastered such crafts as straw weaving, wood carving, ceramics, and copper work, then set up workshops and taught these skills to the Indians. He organized a market in Patzcuaro for the products of these industries and of the land, and the day he set, Friday, is still the market day for the region. He opened schools and founded a college. Four hundred years later, the Tarascans still have Masses offered for their beloved Tata (Father) Vasco, who became their first Bishop and lived and worked among them until his death at the age

In 1951, the Director General of UNESCO and the President of Mexico inaugurated in Patzcuaro the first international training center for fundamental education. When the inaugural addresses were over, a tall graceful Tarascan stepped up to the microphone and said: "We know and understand what you are doing Tata Vasco would approve."

The fundamental education program, which is perhaps the most appealing of UNESCO'S multiple activities, is geared to break the vicious circle of illiteracy, malnutrition, underproduction, and endemic disease in which more than half the world's people-roughly 1200 million-are still living as this jet-propelled twentieth century soars past the sound barriers. These problems have been the perennial companions of missionaries for centuries before and after Father Vasco's time. And while the missionaries have sought first the kingdom of God, they have labored to improve the material welfare of the people to whom they dedicated their lives. That is why the Tarascans knew what was happening the day of the great speeches.

Today these problems are being attacked through inter-governmental cooperation in the various UN agencies. UNESCO'S contribution is the fundamental education program, which aims to help these 1200 million human beings to understand the problems of their environment, give them the skills to solve them through their own efforts, and thereby enable them to attain living conditions befitting human dignity and decency. The subjects taught may seem very simple to the gadget-bred American-things like the advantages of sleeping in a bed instead of on the floor, of boiling drinking water, or of using a steel plough instead of a wooden one. But they spell the difference between sickness and health for over half the population of the world.

June, 1953

And when some of these simple things have been learned, comes the equally simple desire to learn how to read and write.

No one country alone could assume the staggering cost of supplying the trained personnel and developing the suitable educational materials for such programs. That is how Patzcuaro came into being. It is the first regional training center for fundamental education "specialists" who will return to their own countries to train others.

PATZCUARO is typical of how UNESCO works in that it represents the joint effort of UNESCO and other specialized agencies, the Organization of American States, and the Mexican Government. The Mexican Government supplies the land and building and finances the maintenance of the premises. UNESCO fellowships cover board and tuition for the students. And the students' own government stands the travel costs. The first class of 50 students from nine Latin American countries graduated last December; it is expected that twenty countries will be represented by the spring of 1953. Patzcuaro was chosen because the fishing, farm, and mountain villages of the region offer conditions similar to those in which most of the world's "underdeveloped" populations live.

A second regional center has just been opened for the Middle East about forty miles north of Cairo. In addition, some forty-six fundamental education projects are in operation in seventeen states and territories. The techniques and educational materials developed at Patzcuaro, or in any one of the projects, are made available by UNESCO to any government requesting them.

But is this all that UNESCO is up to? What of the great wave of criticisms that has been washing over it in recent months? What of the charge that it is unsympathetic to religion, that it is going to "dictate" to our schools, and that it threatens the Cacholic school system? Isn't it subverting American loyalties, preaching world government, advocating birth control, and a number of other mischievous things? Strictly speaking, the answer to all of these questions is no. What is disturbing about much of the recent clamor is the way so many have managed to jump on the most unlikely bandwagons without bothering to see who is driving.

Briefly, the United Nations Educational Scientific and Cultural Organization, composed of 68 member governments, was formed specifically to work for peace by creating understanding among nations and peoples, promoting co-operation among them through education, science, and culture, and collaborating with member states at their request in the development of educational activities. Like the other Specialized Agencies, it has its own budget, its own Director-General and secretariat, and is the master of its own program, distinct from the United Nations itself. Many of the nations excluded from the UN by the stubborn Soviet veto are members of UNESCO, while the Soviet satellites have all withdrawn. At the last General Conference, two international Communist organizations were dropped from consultative status.

In the very first articles of its Charter, which was ratified by the U. S. Senate, UNESCO is pledged to preserve the "independence, integrity, and fruitful diversity of the cultures and educational systems" of its member states. It is expressly prohibited to intervene in matters "essentially within their domestic jurisdiction." In other words, UNESCO simply cannot "dictate" to the schools of any of its members.

Then how does it work out its aims and purposes? Thanks largely to the dynamic leadership of its Director General of the last four years, the Mexican Jaime Torres-Bodet, UNESCO'S program has been brought down out of the clouds and pinned more or less to eight concrete lines of action. Perhaps Mr. Bodet's greatest contribution is the development of the fundamental education program described above.

FOOC

tl

h

CI

Ca

in

de

ca

th

ur

pr

SECONDLY, UNESCO works for extension of education. Studies and surveys are geared to help governments extend free compulsory education, which may be an old story to us but not to a very great part of the world. Such surveys are made only at the request of governments, which are then free to accept or not the recommendations of the UNESCO mission. The programs developed as a consequence become obviously government pro-

LIBERIA. Hitherto isolated peoples are given adult education. Open-air classes are UNESCO taught and supervised

FRENCH WEST AFRICA. The Three R's seem to intrichildren whose learning is now UNESCO sponso

THE SIGN

INDIA

June

grams. Any relationship between them and Catholic or other private schools are strictly a matter between those schools and the local government.

Also under UNESCO auspices, a number of studies are being made on such matters as the use of the local language in the schools of Africa and India (of considerable interest to missionaries), methods of teaching reading and writing and subjects like the natural sciences, especially where the teaching materials are either quite primitive or totally lacking.

Sometimes it is a local initiative which UNESCO recognizes and lifts to the international scene. For instance, a pioneering priest, Father Joaquin Salcedo, has been so successful in the field of rural education by radio that he caught the eye and the support of the Colombian government. Now under negotiation is a proposal that UNESCO, through its technical assistance program, help extend this work with a view to creating in Colombia a regional training center in the techniques of broadcasting for fundamental education.

In the field of higher education and scientific research, it functions as an international information center. Under its auspices, various bibliographies, catalogues of documentation, multilingual dictionaries, etc., are produced in the fields of the natural, social, and political sciences. Studies have been undertaken on subjects like the tensions produced by industrialization, race relations, and other group tensions.

Though still in embyro stage,

UNESCO's research on arid zones promises to be one of its most dramatic efforts. This looks to the "reconquest of man-made deserts" where man's misuse of the soil, through ignorance and thoughtlessness, has helped the process of wind and water erosion and created wastelands of once rich and fertile regions. These wastelands are growing in Africa, Latin America, Australia, or, to use an example nearer home, in the "dust bowls" of the United States. UNESCO's program in this field includes making available the results of experiments going on all over the world, developing and expanding desert research stations, and research on plant species that might be used to check the march of the advancing desert.

N OT long ago a popular television program, featuring the life of Stephen Foster, opened with a fine dramatic touch, the picture of the worn little purse he had with him when he died. It contained exactly thirty-two cents, while the publishers of the music he had composed throughout his lifetime had reaped all the profits. This might well serve to illustrate another main line of UNESCO activity, the protection of writers and scientists and the preservation of their works. Among other things, this led in the past year to the drafting of an international copyright convention, designed to prevent pirating of works of art, sculpture, and music as well as literary and scientific

In the interests of the "free flow of ALBA ZIZZAMIA, U.N. correspondent for N.C.W.C. News Service, recently made a study tour of U.N. Trust Territories in Africa. Miss Zizzamia has covered U.N. sessions both at headquarters and in Geneva.

ideas," still another treaty was worked out—and ratified to date by thirteen countries—which would eliminate customs duties on a wide range of educational and scientific material, to the tremendous benefit of teachers and students in dollar-short countries.

Bolstering all of these activities, which are but a sampling of the 500 odd items on the UNESCO program, is a substructure of fellowships and travel grants, international conferences and seminars on a formidable variety of subjects, and subventions to several international organizations engaged in some particular study or research. One of these is the International Catholic Child Bureau, which is working on early childhood education.

And last, but by no means least, is UNESCO's emphasis on education for living in a world community. This has given a bad case of jitters to those Americans who think it means world government. Actually, it is but a recognition of a historical fact. We do live in a world community. There is no vacuum around the United States. As the chief U.S. delegate expressed it at the last UNESCO Conference, "Our mission, . .must be to continue a relentless search to find better ways to educate people as citizens of sovereign states in a community of all mankind, preserving the values of diverse cultures and the

INDIA. UNESCO assists Bombay Social Education Committee. Here a woman examines a film made by herself

PAKISTAN. Political self-aggrandizement is enhanced by modern science and techniques

rts

n.

ld.

re-

en la-

he

ice

rights and responsibilities of national citizenships."

Is there nothing wrong with this picture, then? UNESCO, to be sure, as every human organization, is not without its defects and weaknesses, its difficulties and its mistakes. Like the UN and the other Specialized Agencies, it must deal with the complexities offered by the fact that it is composed of 68 governments reflecting widely different mentalities. Not only must it keep them happy, but also the various groups of educators, artists, authors, and scientists, whose work it is pledged to assist.

Like all the UN agencies, it is distinctly an experiment in family living for all the nations which belong to it. The last General Conference, in fact, bore some resemblance to a family squabble in the debate over the budget, which led to the resignation of the Director-General, Mr. Torres-Bodet.

UNESCO has passed the first stage in its growing-up process. What happens next will depend largely on the quality of the moral and intellectual leadership provided by the new Director General, the extent of the co-operation given him by the member governments, and the loyalty he wins from the secretariat.

W HAT of Catholic misgivings on the subject of UNESCO? They began with some justification when the first Director General, Julian Huxley, published a statement on the philosophy of UNESCO (for which the organization disclaimed responsibility), and it looked as if this brash international infant was setting out to redeem the world in blissful disregard of any previous efforts along these lines-Divine or human. Catholics also had historical reasons for being uneasy about professedly "neutral" organizations. Past experience has been that in the warm glow of their "toleration" they are generally "neutral" about everyone and everything except Catholicism. Neither can Catholicism be entirely satisfied with a universal brotherhood unless this acknowledges a legitimate Father, who is God, and not just another international organization. Then there is always the worry that secularism, science, and organization may seek to cancel out faith, hope, and charity.

What is the situation actually today? In the first place, UNESCO has learned a great deal on the policy level in the last six years. Just as its fundamental education experts in Patzcuaro are daily learning from the Indians they went to teach. It is perhaps significant that the Yugoslav delegate to the last Conference felt it necessary to scold UNESCO repeatedly, and with irritation, for being too susceptible to "religious pressures."

Catholicism is in the same situation

Communist Crazy-Quilt

In Budapest, Hungary, the Communist Ministry of Construction ordered all staircase banisters to be equipped with large knobs to prevent youngsters from sliding down.

The Polish regime has forbidden illiterate peasants to sign their names with a cross, because of the religious connotation.

In Mecklenburg, Germany, Red authorities set a one-a-day egg-laying quota for hens,

The Hungarian Government has instructed all restaurants to serve at least five Russian dishes on the menu.

Among new names for perfumes produced in the Soviet Union are "May Day," "Jubilee of the Red Army," and "Svetlana's Breath."

The Moscow newspaper, Izvestia, denounced a scientist for putting sandals on limping pigs to improve their health.

-ALBERT D. SEARS

on the international scene as it is everywhere else—on national and local levels—where it encounters other views and defends its principles with firmness and charity. Such encounters are inevitably a challenge.

The effectiveness of UNESCO's programs depends to a large extent on the methods and the personnel chosen to carry them out. Catholics as well as other citizens of the member countries have a right to offer constructive suggestions and criticisms.

Obviously, the array of studies, monographs, seminar and conference reports, produced under the aegis of UNESCO (but not representing its official views), are neither the last word on the various subjects they treat nor are they of even quality.

Views and conclusions are sometimes presented which Catholics cannot accept. For instance, birth control is currently the popular solution for population problems, in or out of UNESCO, in most non-Catholic thought. Again, a project like the "Scientific and Cultural History of Mankind" inevitably poses the problem of the basic philosophy of its editorial staff and some real, practical difficulties as to method. But all these scientific studies and works of scholarship are subject to evaluation. They are not sacrosanct. Before such an intellectual smorgasbord as this array of studies provides, if there is some one dish which is distasteful, it would seem more sensible to provide a better recipe than to condemn the whole table.

phy

Lor

and hav

how mos

Ho

of c

as reso

to thes

it, a thir

Chr

of I

all mai

hist exp

divi

is t

in thei

the acce

som

fina

vict

this

offe

vict

to r

Pass

ente

sion

Hol

thre

and pred

rede

vita

rece

back in o

in i

Jun

B

T

0

The Holy See last year appointed a permanent observer to UNESCO. Several international Catholic organizations are among those having consultative status with UNESCO. They are also associated in the Catholic Co-ordinating Center for UNESCO in Paris. At the last General Conference, there were Catholic priests on the delegations of five countries, including the United States. The chairman of the program committee of the conference was a Catholic Monsignor from Lebanon. One of the recommendations of UNESCO's Executive Board which the Conference adopted invited UNESCO, in its fundamental education program, to seek the co-operation of the voluntary (i.e., nongovernmental) agencies, including the religious missions. As one UNESCO official observed here recently, "the Charter says we are working for the moral and intellectual solidarity of mankind. We cannot do that and ignore spiritual values.'

The preamble of the UNESCO Charter begins "... since wars begin in the minds of men, it is in the minds of men that the defenses of peace must be constructed."

TWENTY centuries ago, Our Lord said to the Scribes and Pharisees: "For out of the heart come evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, immorality, thefts, false witness, blasphemies. . . ." (Matt. 15:19).

Catholics have the right to judge the end and the means of any organization with reference to their own basic principles. They also have the right and the responsibility—as the Holy Father has pointed out—to contribute the richness of Christian ethics and Christian charity to sincere efforts for international understanding and co-operation.

THE SIGN

The Scourging

by GERALD VANN, O.P.

We may take the second sorrowful mystery as representing all the physical torture and agony which Our Lord had to suffer during the Passion; and, therefore, as one we might well have specially in mind when pain (but how contemptible by comparison, for most of us) comes to us in our turn. How ought we to meet it? It is right, of course, to take such natural remedies as are available; we are justified in resorting to painkillers; we may pray to be released from the pain. Where these are unavailing, we should try to meet it as an external enemy, fight it, and dominate it. But there is something much more than that for the Christian.

i

of

d

m

of

's ce

3.

ne

n-

he ffi-

er

nd

Ve

ial

0

in

of

be ord

es:

its,

fts,

att.

the ion

rin-

the

has ness

rity

der

GN

Our Lord's physical pain was part of His sacrifice; and His sacrifice fulfills all those innumerable sacrifices which mankind has offered through the world's history and in which the offerers have expressed their yearning for life, for divine life. Sacrifice, says St. Augustine, is the offering of a thing that it may be sanctified; and as the victim stands in place of the offerers, so it is to them that the divine gift is to come.

The animal is slain, let us say, in the hope that this offering will be acceptable to the god, who will then in some way "enter into it," so that when finally the offerers communicate in the victim they may themselves receive this sharing in a divine life. First the offering, then the glorifying of the victim, then the coming of divine life to man. This pattern is fulfilled in the Passion, in the sequence of death and entombment, resurrection and ascension (glory), and the coming of the Holy Ghost; it is fulfilled in the Mass through the same sequence of offering and communion.

But the communion is the receiving precisely of the sacrificed Christ, the redeeming Christ; so that it is an invitation, not merely to rejoice in the reception of life oneself, but to go back to the world of everyday affairs in order to help, to share with Christ, in its redeeming. Wherever the Christian its redeeming.

tian goes, bearing Christ with him, he should, with Christ, spread about him comfort and healing, love and joy. And how is he to prepare himself? Precisely by trying to make all his life sacrificial.

When the priest raises the bread and wine at the Offertory—the elements that are to be turned into God—we should identify ourselves with those offerings: our selves, our whole lives, personalities, gifts, joys, and sorrows; our whole world; all the things that go to make "life" for us and for our fellow men. We should offer them that they may be sanctified. And when it is Christ who is raised at the Consecration, we can make the same identification, praying that our lives may become part of the sacrifice of the Cross.

But "our lives" means all the events and incidents, all the joys and sorrows that come to us from moment to moment. (For joys too can be sacrificed, can be offered in order to be sanctified; you thank God for the joy, you realize that it is His gift, you will not cling to it in defiance of Him should He wish you to part with it. So it becomes part of your love and worship of Him.)

But Our Lord suffered, and it is the ready acceptance of suffering that is the greatest test of love, the deepest love-gift. Consequently, our own pains -or sufferings of any sort-have an especially important part in this idea of the Christian life as sacrificial. These especially can be offered that they (and we) may be sanctified; not, of course, with complacence or self-pity, not magnifying them or our own fortitude in bearing them, but humbly, trying to thank God that we have been able to share a little with Him but realizing very clearly how small a share it is, even compared with that of many of our fellow men.

If then, in that way, we put such pain as the day may bring us into the chalice at the offertory; and if, when the pain comes, we try in that way to make it a creative thing—not letting ourselves brood about it, or making speeches to God about it, but trying so far as we can to "take it in our stride" with a brief turning of our hearts to the Christ of the scourging—we shall be doing something of great value not only for ourselves but for others. We shall be helping to bring blessings upon the world.

IT is the recognition of this, we are to suppose, that leads the saints to go so far beyond the inescapable sufferings that come to them, so far beyond the needs of asceticism. Their longing is to seek out suffering, to share as fully as possible in the Passion, to be with Christ in the closest possible compassion: first, because that is what their love of Him drives them to, and secondly because in that way they fulfill also their love of mankind; they help as fully as they can in the healing of the world. If we in our small way try to meet our small pains and sufferings and troubles with some small measure of the same love, we shall not have suffered in vain.

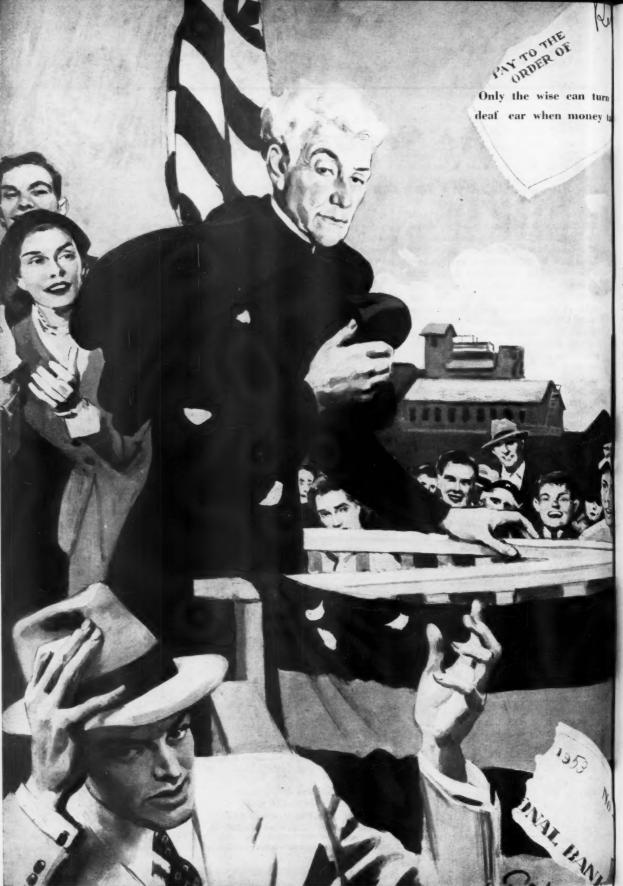

TALL ON THE CROSS

by LOUISE JUAREZ

Strong. He was so strong!
The Man from Galilee.
It was not safe for Him to be
When weak men are a majority.
Tall. He was so tall!
The Man from Galilee.
It was not safe for Him to be Taller than Priest or Pharisee.
They bound Him with funereal bands.
He broke them with His nail-pierced hands.

Upon His corpse they laid a stone. He moved it with His breath alone, Rose and stretched to Heaven's light. So strong He was . . . Such was His height.

June, 1953

The shouts of the crowd were turning to boos as he tore the paper to shreds and flung it at them

ILLU

REI all i house tasted look the b town breat on ea in th Josep whole

You Red the use so that fighti the rebegar hills

The your behird afraid black ber black ber black ber black big men clank Bur Run the vricke into ing, old dowr lungs live toun get a you is on The the f

June

the Blaman

ILLUSTRATED BY OSCAR F. SCHMIDT

by PATRICK S. TRAYNOR

RED Run has had its moments. No one can very well deny that. For all its cluster of lopsided company houses and its unpaved street, it has tasted a bit of living in its day. To look at it, though, you might think that the blanket of coal dust that covers the town has never been stirred by an angry breath or a hasty foot. The houses lean on each other like tired old folk caught in the rain, and the steeple of Saint Joseph's Church looks down on the whole lot with a smug, sleepy eye.

You might find it hard to believe that Red Run was the seat of the "trouble," the ugly business with the collieries that we scarcely mention even to this day, that not too many years ago there was fighting on this quiet, rocky street when the railroads and their black giants first began to chew up the laurel on our hills and enslave us.

There have been moments to break your heart, moments when terror hid behind every bush, and a man was afraid to go to work. There have been black nights, like the night when Number Five burned down with thirty-two of our best inside. Yes, Red Run had its moments; and it has produced had its moments; and it has produced hig men, men whose names are legends, men who were bigger, even, than the clanking monsters that used them.

But all this is history. Today, Red Run has mellowed. The same dust coats the window sills and shingles, the same rickety barneys plunge the men down into the bowels of the earth every morning, but the old hatreds are gone, the old fierce struggles have simmered down, and the youngsters with good lungs take themselves off to the city to live in houses shaded by trees and surtounded by cement. Today, you can get a job at the colliery, no matter how you spell your name, and the foreman is one of us.

The old-timers doze in the sun outside the firehouse, their canes resting against the wall. When they wake, the talk is not of ambush and arson, but of the blasted Diesels that thunder past, hooting in derision. The only violence the town knows today is an occasional scuffle in one of our four saloons. Our cultural center is Dooley's barbershop, where Frank Dooley presides at every debate and waves his scissors with fearful emphasis. Today, Red Run appears to be no different from a thousand other upstate Pennsylvania patches. But it is. For you see, we have one big man left. It is about him that I want to tell you.

Father Pat Devlin has been our pastor for the last thirty years. In that time, he has argued, cajoled, and laughed us right out of our birthright. And we love it. It is impossible to escape the power of the man. Whether cleaning out an unruly crowd in the saloon, or umpiring our ballgames, or getting sarcastic with the school board, Father Pat is a fearless man of God. We, who scarcely remember any other priest in our green stuccoed rectory, look on him as the one who has ruled 'our town, fought our battles, bound up our wounds. And, although we often enough ran in fear from the lash of his Irish brogue, yet we love him as we love every stone in our church.

For most of those thirty years, Father Pat has run the parish himself, as faithfully as if it were the Bishop's seat. But now he has a curate, for, like Red Run itself, Father Pat has slipped some. He is in his seventies. He has diabetes; and he is blind. He has a bad foot that won't heal, but he still takes the hand of an altar boy and tours the town. He still roars from the altar with his old fire, and he is still as straight as a rail. We shake our heads sadly when he tells us, "My sight is not very good," remembering the times when we thought it was too good. We still quake, the oldest of us, before those sightless eyes, and feel very small. Yes, any way you look at it, Father Pat is a big man.

The day that Ted Francis' boy,

Tommy, came back to Red Run, there were some who got it into their heads that we had another big man. Tommy is famous. Since he left us fifteen years ago, he has gone far. Everybody in the world, I guess, has heard of Tommy Francis. He has starred in more pictures out in Hollywood than you could shake a stick at, and, when he came back here to shoot some scenes for the story of his life, well, he caused quite a stir.

I suppose it was in the books that he and Father Pat would tangle. For, since Tommy Francis moved to Hollywood, he has changed more than his address. He is currently squiring his third wife, and, if we are to believe the papers, the end is not yet. Besides, he was not in Red Run twenty minutes before we found out that he had the strange idea that Red Run was his private preserve; whereas, most of us were under the impression that it was Father Pat's. In short, the two were as far apart as, well, Red Run and Beverly Hills, where Tommy had a couple of houses. No wonder that when he arrived with his cameramen and fifty other assorted characters, the whole town forgot all about the blasted Diesels for a while and turned out to see the fun.

THOUGH Tommy Francis' scandalous life had left a bad taste in our mouths, we had the band out for him, and the fire truck, for we always do the decent thing on occasions like this. And he seemed well satisfied, for he made a nice speech from Joe Gaughan's porch, to the effect that he remembered well when he ran around the back street in his bare feet and slept in his dungarees.

Some of us thought he needn't have mentioned such things. We still have a lot of pride, even though the collieries are working only two days a week and most of the grocery bills are on the book these days. However, I guess we were willing to overlook a lot for a Red Run boy who had worked his way out of Big Yank dungarees into such elegant duds in fifteen years or so. In fact, he might have had a royal welcome, if he hadn't decided to put fake fronts on some of the houses for his picture, trying to make Red Run look worse than it was, which hurt plenty; and picking out the grimiest kids to run in front of the cameras. Altogether, I think we disappointed him.

The climax of Tommy Francis' invasion of Red Run was when he announced that he would lead an impromptu parade down to the rectory and present Father Pat with a check for five hundred dollars, which made us all give him a big hand and fall into line. Something happened, though, for when Tommy came out of the parish house, he just spat once on the ground, glared at the lot of us, climbed into his Cadillac, and that was that. Later, of course, we heard what went on. Katie, the housekeeper, must have written it all down and memorized it, for she could tell us every word that was spoken.

We might have known that Father Pat would refuse the money. He was like that. But what he told Tommy made us tingle all over. It seems he reminded him of the time when he was Father Pat's altar boy, and how it was a sad day when he left the town and got out of the dungarees that he slept in, and married three wives, and disgraced his dad and the Church and Father Pat. There was more, but the upshot was that Tommy bolted in a rage.

Things quieted down for a spell after that, until The Road To Glory, the story of Tommy's rise to fame, finally got to the Imperial in Coalville. Almost everyone who had the bus fare went to see it, and they all came back feeling pretty good about being citizens of Red Run, Pa., the birthplace of Tommy Francis. I don't suppose Father Pat would have gone, even if he could see, but many of us thought it was more than a coincidence that for two Sundays straight Father Pat's curate preached against the pagan influences abroad today, the magazines and movies that glorified money and loose living and sneered at honest toil and decent poverty. Somehow, we felt that young Father Lavin had got his orders.

JUST about June things really came to a head. That was when Tommy Francis sent a telegram to the Burgess, Jim Brogan, saying that he was coming up again. As if that wasn't enough, he added that he had a presentation to make from the proceeds of his picture. And he was going to make it to Father Pat. The next day, the papers came out with it. Tommy Francis had heard that the church of his childhood had been pulled from its foundation by the mines, that it was about to be condemned by the mining engineers. As a grand gesture from the heart, Tommy was going to come to the rescue of Old Saint Joseph's and its beloved pastor, the Reverend Patrick J. Devlin, with a check for $35,000. The papers acclaimed it as a noble gesture to a beleaguered community and gave it plenty of space.

The more thoughtful heads at the barbershop conceded that our old saint was on the spot. This was Tommy's revenge. For it was all too true about the church. Recently, a huge crack had appeared in the foundation wall. Our Lady's altar had dropped about six inches, and some plaster had fallen off in the corner. Father Pat had uttered threats against the contract miners who had been "robbing the pillars," as we say, beneath the whole town. But it would take money to fight them in the courts, and you couldn't do it with a thirty-dollar plate collection on Sunday. It certainly looked as if Tommy Francis held all the aces. Father Pat, it seemed, would have to take the money or give the town and the church a black eye in every paper in the country.

Barber Dooley, of course, put the whole matter on a moral plane by pointing out that we must separate the sin from the sinner, and not refuse even the charity of a blackguard. With emphatic waves of his comb, he went on to say how the good Lord Himself ate with sinners. To which I myself murmured something about the Pharisees being quite another thing. And so it went, every discussion ending with a "But you know Father Pat!"

Catch the Varmint!

Like too many of today's younger set, the little girl was an avid TV fan. Unfortunately, the programs she watched were not subjected to parental censorship.

When a playmate spoke one day of her "Nanny," the little girl asked her mother why she didn't have a grandmother too.

"Your grandmother is dead," her mother said.

"She's dead!" the little girl exclaimed. Then, "Who shot her?"

-Ruth McDermott

Those who enjoyed the furore the most, I think, were the oldtimers, those ancients of the town who sat in the sun outside the firehouse and predicted dire things with the coming of the Diesels, and spat. To them, it was a glorious thing that Red Run should again be in turmoil, and many a cane was waved excitedly as they strove to get Father Pat off Tommy Francis' hook.

blown oldes

and c

the s across cham pen.

thing

Then the o

for t

that blow head

gathe

weak

see a what many vanta

the y

God,

casso

shou

pasto

of yo

in th glory

I can beca

neve itself

scars

it h

this alwa

was unio

alwa

will righ

whi

mor

On

Jim

inti

in

can ease

for

he wri

he

a s tha

us.

pri

dre

Ju

F

"(

"T

"M

Meanwhile daily reports came out of the rectory. Katie was mystified. Father Pat had taken the news silently and, ever since, had spent most of each day in his big chair, with the Rosary in his gnarled hands, staring sightlessly at his bookcase. In better days, the pastor would have thundered his answer across the dinner table at every meal. Instead, no word escaped his lips, and each day found him more unsteady on his feet. Such reports caused a shift in opinion, and Tommy Francis' stock rose.

AT last the day arrived. An elaborate stand had been built in front of the honor roll, the fire truck had been polished all over again, and the band was out early to serenade the crowds who came from all the patches around. The first move, however, came from the rectory. About 10:30, the door flew open, and Katie, thrilled with her sudden importance, came down the street, apron flying, to whisper to Burgess Jim Brogan: "Father is coming down to the stand! He says to get Lissie's big chair for him! Glory Be!" And, looking to heaven for help, she rushed back.

When the best chair in town had been properly installed, all eyes turned to the high road. The familiar string of shiny cars was approaching. As the news photographers shuffled forward with the crowd, hardly a one noticed Father Pat coming out of the rectory, leaning heavily on his curate, and with the cape of his worn cassock flapping about his neck. He seemed even more feeble than usual, but his old biretta was fixed on hrs head with a slightly defiant tilt, and his shoulders were straight. When he had mounted the stand and found his place, he took off his biretta, and his head came up, as if to sniff the breeze. The oldsters, gathered in a knot at the firehouse door, nudged each other, and shivered excitedly. Red Run was having another of its moments. It was good to be alive to see it.

The photographers' bulbs began to pop in earnest, as Tommy Francis' came forward on the stand to shake Father Pat's hand briefly and take a chair beside him. Then the preliminaries got underway. Everything was greeted with roars of nervous applause. Finally, Jim Brogan called for a few words from Father Pat, a suggestion that was greeted by a shout that must have blown the dust off the honor roll. The oldest inhabitants waved their canes and caps, and shook their heads to clear the sudden mist that seemed to come across their old eyes. Here was their champion, no matter what was to happen. They knew he would do the right thing by the town and its memories. Then they waited in anxious silence as the old priest slowly rose and groped for the railing. It seemed a long time that he stood there, a wisp of gray hair blowing across his forehead, turning his head slightly, as if he could see the faces gathered below him. Then he spoke.

THE SIGN

ne

to

k.

ut

ch

sly

er

nd

on se.

ate

en

nd

vels

nd.

the en.

im-ron ro

the nair

to een

to

of

ews

vith

her

ing

ape

his han

on

and

he

his eze.

the

and hav-

boog

1 to ncis'

hake

e a limi-

was ause.

few

that have

IGN

"My beloved friends." His voice was weak, but controlled. "I wish I could see all of you. I would like to know what the last ten years have done to my many, many friends. You have the advantage on me; for you can see what the years have done to me. But, thank God, I can still stand before you in my cassock and collar and tell you what should be done.

"Thirty years is a long time to be pastor of one parish. I have seen most of you grow up from young striplings to the heads of families. I have had a hand in the making of all of you. That is my glory. You know, there are many things I can see without a pair of good eyes, because there are many things here that never change. One of them is the town itself. Red Run knows how to hide its scars. Red Run is proud of what little it has, and holds on to that jealously.

"One of the greatest possessions of this town is righteousness. We have always stood for the right, whether it was against the mine foremen, or the union bosses, or ourselves. And we have always won. I think, somehow, that we will always continue to choose the right—that we will continue to win."

He paused, swayed a trifle, then whispered, "I am too tired to say any more."

H^E sat down, amid a silence that gave way to a thunder of cheers. Only after order had been restored did Jim Brogan take a deep breath and introduce Tommy Francis.

When the movie star stepped forward in his immaculate white suit, the cameramen went to work, and with the ease of long experience Tommy smiled for them, waved his hand, and answered their shouts for different poses. Then, he dismissed them with a flick of the wrist. The crowd blinked nervously.

"I am not going to make a speech," he began. "I realize this affair is quite a strain on Father Pat, and I am sure that it is an emotional strain on all of us. It is not often that a man is privileged in his lifetime to see all his dreams come true. That privilege is mine this morning. Not too long ago,

The band was out early to serenade the crowds from miles around

I walked these dusty streets and dreamed of the time when I would see the nevernever lands that lay just beyond the hill. Well, I did, and found that these fabulous places could be won with hard work, talent, and a determination to get ahead. Then I dreamed of coming back here and conquering, not your collieries and company homes, but your hearts, to lift you in some measure out of the poverty that plagues your lives. It gives me the greatest satisfaction to be able to help you, help you with a check that represents more than most of you ever saw.

"This check," and he suddenly drew it forth from his pocket, "goes to Father Pat for the church from a faithful son of Red Run."

Turning, he pressed the check into the priest's clenched hand and sat down to mop his brow. The crowd was as silent as death. Every eye was on that tiny piece of paper.

Slowly, Father Pat fingered the check, smoothed it out carefully, and coughed. Then he rose. It seemed like a long time he stood there, looking out into the tense silence. Then he lowered his head and seemed to be weighing the biretta in his one hand against the check in his other. Finally, in a tired, hoarse whisper, almost as if thinking to himself, he said,

"This is quite a moment. It hardly seems fair that such a moment should come to me now, when I am worn-out, and old, and blind, and haven't the strength to . . ."

His voice broke, and that was all the crowd could stand. A wail of sympathy went up from the women, and the oldtimers stumbled forward.

Old Mark Daley was the first to reach the stand, and, brandishing his stick wildly, he roared, in a voice that used to set the mine mules moving,

"By God, we'll answer for you, Father Pat! Let him keep his filthy check. And 'tis his own father, that stood at my side for twenty years would say the same. We don't ever have to sell ourselves for the likes o' that!"

Then everyone was shouting at once. Tommy Francis, at this sudden explosion, had turned livid with rage. He leaped to his feet and stared down for a moment at the battery of angry faces below him. Then he turned and snatched the check from Father Pat's fingers. The shouts of the crowd were turning into boos, as he tore the paper to shreds and flung it out at them. Seconds later, he was in his car, speeding away, but not before one cameraman had captured for his front page a priceless shot of the bits of the check floating down past the face of Father Pat, a face that wore just the hint of a tired smile.

THE SIJII POST

by ALOYSIUS McDONOUGH, C.P.

Pagan Names vs. Christian

Why does the Church object to names that are not considered Christian, such as my own. At one time, weren't all names pagan?—A. W., BROOKLYN, N. Y.

As you say, had it been the practice of the Church, two thousand years ago, to insist upon Christian names, there would have been very few to go 'round. But by this time, the total of Christian names adds up to very many thousands. Before the beginning of Christianity, with the exception of names in vogue among the Chosen People, all names were pagan. But with astounding rapidity, previously pagan names became the names of Christian martyrs. A baptismal name should remind us of a Christian saint, worthy of admiration and imitation, to whose protection we are dedicated. We have searched diligently, but to the best of our present knowledge, Aurora is the name of a mythical and pagan goddess of the dawn and has never been dignified as the name of a saint.

Apropos of another inquiry of yours, we have sent abroad for information, but still await reliable data. Please do not feel too disappointed at the delay in replying to your several questions. Hundreds of inquiries are on the waiting list. It is impossible to cope with that list by way of private reply. As for published answers, a priority has to be given to topics of general interest, not recently covered.

In or Out?

In connection with the "Sign Post" for March, 1953 (page 64), I am confused. You seem to make the same claim for which the "Boston heretics" were condemned!—E. McM., Buffalo, N. Y.

Apparently, in reading the "Sign Post" reply in question, you focused your attention so much on one statement as to lose track of another. Both statements represent Catholic teaching. The second idea is needed in order to understand the full and accurate meaning of the first one.

It is a point of Catholic faith that "outside the Church there is no salvation." At the same time, Catholic teaching—as voiced by the Vicar of Christ, Pope Pius IX—insists that a non-Catholic, whose ignorance of the one true Church is not blameworthy, can merit eternal life. Is it complimentary to God to assume that He will condemn the blameless?

As a matter of fact, a sincere, good living non-Catholic does belong to the Church, although only in an implicit way. The attitude of sincere co-operation, in the case of any such non-Catholic, amounts to this: "I am sincerely disposed, to the best of my ability and at all costs, to learn and to follow out the will of God." Can a more commendable attitude be imagined? That over-all attitude of sincere co-operation includes the desire and intention to embrace the one true Faith.

"Outside the Church, no salvation" means that there are only two kinds of non-Catholics who cannot be saved-those who recognize the one true Church and yet ignore it, and those who fail to recognize it through their own fault, through blameworthy ignorance. Only those two kinds of non-Catholics are outside the Church entirely. In the "Sign Post" reply you refer to, we stated in a balanced way: 1) "Outside the Church there is no salvation;" 2) "Sincere non-Catholics are disposed to respond to and co-operate with God according to their lights. Hence, although unaware of the logical consequence of their good will, they belong to His Church in desire and inclination-effectively, though not formally or fully."

To say that, at one and the same time, a person can belong to the Church ideally, and yet be outside the Church completely, would be a contradiction. But there is no contradiction in saying that a Catholic belongs to the Church explicitly and fully, while a sincere non-Catholic belongs only implicitly and partially.

The trouble with the "Boston heretics" is that they refuse to admit such a thing as non-Catholic sincerity; they fail to make due allowance for ignorance that is not blameworthy. Pope Pius IX, while insisting that for salvation a person must belong to the only true Church somehow or other, to some extent at least, warns us lest we be so arrogant as to take it upon ourselves to set limits to blameless ignorance.

According to an up-to-date dictionary, a fanatic is a person who is excited by an extreme and unreasoning enthusiasm or zeal, especially in religious matters. We might add that, oftentimes, another ingredient of fanaticism is at least a "pepper and salt" dash of pride. The "Boston heretics" are fanatics.

Out of the Question

How about enclosed clipping from AP Science Writer-J. S., Philadelphia, Pa.

As usual, anything goes—to create a sensation. According to headlines, a beginning of human life was observed under a microscope. But the rest of the writeup merely describes a laboratory experiment, during which scientists observed the activity of male and female cells—the physical factors which contribute to human life. No assertion was made that a new creature resulted from the merger of male and female elements. Hence, it was not claimed—by the scientists—that a human life was started.

You inquire: Let us assume that a human life was actually begun under the conditions described. Is it correct to assume that such a creature has an immortal soul? Is it morally wrong to conduct such experiments?

We cannot assume that any such creature would be human. If it were human, it would have an immortal soul. But only the Creator can endow a creature with a human sou!

THE SIGN

hun hun examof was "I n

of Eccl sure

men not the

has men

was

Pius

Virg

into coup

Joac

excl

depe

urge hum

meth

with

Can

A

Ca

SO

R

By a

why

olic

the c

the ever,

ple 1

to al

conce

silen

thou know

comp

notor

have ashan

Misu

"11

me

PIT

Your

not s non-(

with

Faith

Catho

follow

June,

Is

soul. Male and female cells are only material. To claim that material elements could beget a spiritual soul would be scientific bosh. The teaching of the Catholic Church that human souls are created by God and by Him assigned to human bodies is very well bolstered in the Scriptures. For example, turn to the seventh chapter of the Second Book of Machabees. The mother who, with her seven sons, was about to die rather than deny their faith, declared: "I neither gave you breath, nor soul, nor life, neither did I frame the limbs of every one of you-but the Creator of the World." In his comment upon the Book of Ecclesiastes, (XII:7), St. Jerome says: "Hence, they are surely to be laughed at, who believe that the souls of men are begotten with their bodies, and are generated not by God but by the parents of their bodies. For since the flesh reverts to dust and the spirit returns to God who has given it, manifestly the Father of souls is God, not men." When the Immaculate Conception of God's Mother was announced infallibly by the Vicar of Christ, Pope Pius IX, His Holiness declared that the soul of the Blessed Virgin Mary was free from all taint of original sin, from the first instant of its creation and infusion (by God) into the body. Hence, the creation of the soul and its coupling with the body were not the accomplishment of Joachim and Ann, but the work of God, directly and

Is it morally wrong to conduct such experiments? That depends. It is wrong, if scientists be prompted by a futile urge to accomplish what only God can do—to produce a human soul and with it to animate a body, or if their methods of obtaining male and female cells be in conflict with the laws of Nature and Nature's God.

Can Do?

1

vn

In

ed

nd

ood

can rch

no

the

olic

fuse

fail

me-

tion

how

be elves

y, a

an

or We ngre-

pper

oston ter?-

rding

ınder

cribes

erved

actors

e that emale

tists-

was orrect

al? Is ld be l soul

uman

SIGN

A Catholic and an unbaptized non-Catholic were married before a justice of the peace. Their child, now an adult Catholic, would like to have his parents' marriage rectified, so that his mother can be reconciled to God through the sacraments. Can this be done? And without fanfare?—R. F., SAN DIEGO, CALIF.

By all means. If both parents be willing, there is no reason why this merely civil marriage cannot be rectified in a Catholic way. As for fanfare-that word is misleading. Even in the case of a mixed marriage with permission of the Church, the usual banns of matrimony are not announced. However, if it be known publicly that the marriage of this couple had never been approved by the Church, it is only fair to all concerned to publicize its correction. Otherwise, all concerned would be embarrassed anew. The best way to silence wagging tongues is to do the right thing, even though tardily, and to let the neighbors have an up-to-date knowledge of the facts. That sort of publicity can be accomplished quietly, without marriage banns or newspaper notoriety. The old saying is not without equity: What we have not been ashamed to do publicly, we should not be ashamed to admit.

Misunderstanding

If I misunderstood you, accept my sincere apology. Under "Wolves" in the March "Sign Post," you made a statement that is trite and, in my opinion, ignorant.—R. C., PITTSBURGH, PA.

Your apology accepted. You did misunderstand. We did not say that a Catholic sins, necessarily, by associating with non-Catholics. We said that the association of Catholics with non-Catholics is sinful to the extent that the Catholic Faith may be thereby endangered. We included wobbly Catholics, too, as a danger to the Faith. But it does not follow, as you allege, that we denied all men to be created equal, or that we recommended the spurning of Protestants and Jews. We agree with you—there are many fine non-Catholics in the world. Under "Wolves," reread our tribute to them and our indictment of unrepresentative Catholics, and you will feel pacified.

Meatless Day Privileges

In these days of frozen foods and deep freeze, isn't it ridiculous that in certain areas of our Southwest, the Church's laws of fast and abstinence do not have to be observed?—C. L., COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO.

Until rather recently, the Church's law of abstinence did not bind the faithful in certain areas of our Southwest, and in Central and South America. However, the law of fasting did bind them. Fasting has to do with the quantity of food; abstinence, with the quality—with reference to meat and meat products. But in the vast majority of those areas of the Americas where the "meatless day privileges" were permitted, the law of the universal Church is now in force. On the days specified, both residents and transients must conform to the law.

As for the privileges so long enjoyed, there is more to be considered than the scarcity of foods which would serve as a substitute for meat. Most of the settlers in those areas were descendants of Spanish Crusaders. The Crusaders were granted a dispensation from the law of abstinence, not only because of wartime conditions, but also as a reward for their co-operation in the holy wars for the recovery of the Holy Land and for the protection of Christian Europe. Throughout the world, especially in wartime, the laws of fast and abstinence are relaxed very considerably for all military personnel. In certain areas of Europe, the meatless day privileges of the Crusaders are still to be enjoyed. However—aside from hardship circumstances—the over-all tendency is to re-establish among all the faithful a normal spirit of penance and self-control. To cater to minority privileges without up-to-date reasons can weaken the morale of the majority.

To Be Avoided-Extremes

Must we believe in private revelations? Can we believe the promises listed in some private revelations—for example, that in return for fidelity to specified prayers, fifteen relatives will be confirmed and preserved in God's grace?—C. B., Dunmore, PA.

For a long time, the expression—"a middle of the road" policy—has been familiar. It is an apt expression for putting across the idea that any prudent, advisable course of action should avoid excess. In the same sense, we speak of the "happy mean" which is midway between extremes. The moderation which steers a middle course between being too liberal and too conservative can be applied to dozens of human problems—from diplomacy to diets.

Of all the fields of human activity wherein a due moderation should be observed, the sphere of religion is outstanding. Heresy—an error in Catholic faith or morals—is a clearcut case of going to extremes, of insisting upon less or more than we should believe. It is unfortunate, but nonetheless typical of human nature, that many people are prone to the extreme called religious skepticism, while others are prone to the opposite extreme of being gullible. The latter sort of person is easily "taken in" and falls prey to most any "get rich quick" scheme. The former type of person is so distrustful that his mind is closed tight against evidence. Neither type of extremist "has the makings" of a scholar or of a saint.

When we Catholics speak of public revelation, we understand thereby a message revealed by God to one or more individuals, for the benefit of the universal Church, for the world at large. The only cases of public revelation are the Holy Scriptures and Tradition. By private revelation, we mean a message revealed by God to an individual, chiefly and directly for his benefit or for the benefit of a few others also. The fact that the entire Church may be edified by such revelation does not make it a public revelation.

June, 1953

All are obliged in conscience to believe God's public revelation. The only ones obliged to believe a private revelation are those to whom it was made and for whom it was directly intended. Although others should not despise a private revelation, they may—if they think best—maintain a neutral attitude. The Church's approval of such revelation indicates merely that there is nothing in conflict with Catholic faith and morals.

It is a human mystery that people who seem otherwise well balanced are inclined to stake their salvation on the recommendations to be found in a private revelation, and at the same time to bypass the obligations imposed by public revelation. A symptom of that brand of "piety" is the behavior of some who "haunt" the shrine of a favorite saint but snub the Real Presence of God in the tabernacle. So, too, the wooden-headed faith of those who fear to omit prayers recommended in a private revelation, or whose interpretation of "revealed promises" does not gee with God's public revelation.

According to the infallible teaching of the Church, as expressed by the Council of Trent, no one—without a special divine revelation to that effect—can be certain of his eternal salvation. Furthermore, the grace of God which is essential for salvation can be lost. Hence, the grace of God and eternal salvation are not guaranteed unconditionally, by the cut-and-dried recitation of any prayers—without due regard to a consistently virtuous life. Since that is true of every individual, all the more so of "fifteen relatives." The grace of God, which is a gift of divine mercy, is not dispensed to us according to any "slot machine" methods. To believe so and hope so is superstition and exposes honest-to-goodness religion to ridicule.

"Sign Post" Files

Every now and then, you urge us to file the "Sign Post" a good idea for reference—but that means ripping up my copy of The Sign. I like to circulate it among the neighbors intact. Why not reprint the "Sign Post" once in a while as a permanent book?—D. M., Scottsville, N. Y.

Off and on, we have recommended that the "Sign Post" be filed for future reference. Incoming questions are all but countless. Many inquiries call for a repetition of what has been already published, even recently. Preference should be given to new topics. But even for the purpose of filing the "Sign Post," it is a pity to mutilate your copy. And if you give it away intact, you have to do without. Perhaps your suggestion is worthwhile. We would be interested in the opinions of "Sign Post" readers.

No Yardstick

Whenever a member of our family dies, for the repose of his soul we provide the thirty-day Gregorian Masses. But we do not have any later, anniversary Masses. Don't the Gregorian Masses suffice? Can there be any doubt that our relatives are in Heaven? We pray for them daily.—M. D., PITTSBURGH, PA.

If we could be absolutely certain that our relatives are in heaven, it would be unnecessary to pray for them. There is solid reason to hope that the thirty-day Masses, coupled with the intercession of Saint Gregory, will liberate a soul from Purgatory. On the score of efficacy, one Mass could suffice to empty Purgatory. However, we do not know the precise benefit that a soul in Purgatory receives as a result of the Mass or other suffrages. That depends upon the good pleasure of God. On the one hand, you have by no means neglected your departed relatives; on the other hand, it would not be out of order to include them in your prayers indefinitely.

In Ratio to Gravity

Is there any limit to a priest's power of absolving sin in the confessional?—M. K., CHICAGO, ILL.

In emergency circumstances, any priest may absolve from any sin and from any censure or penalty attached to grave sin. Aside from such circumstances, the absolution of a sin or of a penalty such as excommunication may be reserved to the bishop of a diocese, or even to the Holy See. The purpose of this restriction is to impress upon the guilty a realization of the special gravity of certain sins committed; it is intended also as a deterrent against the commission of such sins. Typical examples are the case of murder called abortion and the attempted marriage of a Catholic before a non-Catholic minister.

tatio

ploy

I de

may

tion

is a run

in j whi

and of j

plet

N

cha

and mer

com

divi

mu

also adn

of

spo

and lior em

cho

wag

cou

in

as cati

in e ope

you

glo

ties

lik

Ju

A

I

I

T

Infant Angels?

Please answer these questions for our study club. a) Did God create all the angels that ever will be, at the beginning of time? b) if angels are spirits without bodies, is the notion incorrect that, when children die, they become angels? c) Why the Mass of the Angels at a child's funeral?—E. M., COPAKE FALLS, N. Y.

a) As far as we know—yes. b) Incorrect; an infant is a human being as much so as an adult—that's why abortion is murder; human nature supposes a body as well as a soul. Pictures and statues that feature baby-size angels can be as misleading as angel wings. To refer to very young children as "little angels" is only a figure of speech to suggest the idea of their innocence. c) A child who dies before the age of reason and responsibility does not need our suffrages. Hence, the Mass of the Angels is not necessary, nor is it customary everywhere. A funeral Mass on the occasion of a child's death is rather by way of consolation for bereaved parents; the Mass of the Angels is appropriate because the infant enjoys the company of God and His angels.

Catholic Camps

I would like to place my children for the summer in a camp under Catholic auspices. How can I get reliable information?—R. K., TOLEDO, O.

The 1953 Directory of Catholic Camps, countrywide in coverage, is now available at $1.00, at the Office of the National Catholic Camping Association, 1312 Massachusetts Ave., N. W., Washington 5, D. C.

"The Sign Post" is an information service for our readers. Letters of inquiry should be addressed to "The Sign Post." c/o THE SIGN, Union City, N. J. Inquiries should pertain to the faith, practices, and history of the Catholic Church. Inquirers should identify themselves by giving name and address. Anonymous letters will be disregarded. Questions are not answered by private reply. Personal problems of conscience—especially marriage cases—should be referred to one's pastor or confessor.

Ah, Men, the Poor Dears!

I INTEND no disloyalty to my own sex, but there has been so much agitation in some quarters for equal employment rights for women lately that I decided to examine the situation.

he ult he no

ers

in om ive sin

on se,

his

ain

erns.

der

ige

er.

a) ies,

hev

ld's

s a ion

oul.

as ren

the

the

ges.

it

of a ved

the n a ble

in

the hu-

The results surprised me a little, dismayed me some, and gave every indication that the phrase, "A man's world," is a hollow one that's getting hollower.

I found that today's man is not only running what appears to be a losing race in job competition with today's woman, which I expected, but he's having more and more difficulty landing certain types of jobs in which he once enjoyed complete and even "closed shop" superiority. This I didn't expect.

Man still has more than an even chance to earn a good living in the arts and sciences—women have made tremendous inroads here, however—where competition is usually on a strictly individual talent and aptitude basis.

The field of politics is also pretty much reserved to the male—women have also made tremendous inroads here in the last few years—since most women admit they'd rather yote for a man.

In professional sport, man is king of baseball and the so-called "contact" sports of boxing, football, and hockey.

In the broader brackets of business and industry, however, in terms of millions of jobs, men are being supplanted.

A careful check of a cross-section of employers of labor indicates that men are ruled out for positions in which a choice is possible because they ask higher wages, are less patient, less polite, less courteous, manually less dextrous, and in official language, "constitutionally not as well fitted."

Take the telephone operator classification.

There are now hundreds of operators in every American city of size. Originally, operators were exclusively boys and young men, but they were evidently vainglorious and pettily proud and rapidly acquired the reputation for telling parties who complained of wrong numbers, etc., where they could go if they didn't like the service.

Things got so bad the continuance of a vital public utility was in jeopardy.

Girls were tried as a solution and their voices were so much easier on the public's nerves, their manners so much better, that the lads were fired, more girls hired and, today, they are not only firmly entrenched but the telephone is practically a symbol of "the eternal feminine."

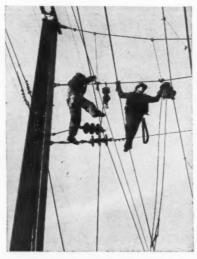

Two other employment doors closing to men are those leading to jobs as transportation stewards and waiters—on planes, busses, trains, and boats.

Only a few top restaurants still prefer men waiting on table. The smaller, less costly and more numerous spots, the hash-houses, the quick-lunch counters, and the corner purveyors of those sizzling American institutions, the hot dog and the hamburger, use women almost exclusively.

Employers argue that, in addition to being less expensive and more polite than men, the girls are also much, much more decorative.

In the general business field, men rarely get the nod any more when secretaries, stenographers, receptionists, sales workers, or bookkeepers are needed.

If you will exclude the rather small

No female competition here!

group of male nurses, the tremendously important nursing profession is another all but closed to men.

Consider, too, that men are almost entirely ruled out as teachers in elementary grades and as baby-sitters.

(Baby-sitting is now big business and agencies specializing in "sitters" are springing up all around the country.)

In industry, men are thumbed out as coil winders, condenser winders, light bench assembly workers, in the preparation of fruits, vegetables, fowl, and meats for canning; candy dipping, processing, and handling; laundry workers, and all lightweight garment duties in this nation's vast "needle trade."

Men can't get so much as their noses in the cosmetics and fashion fields, except for a few executive positions.

They are also practically barred from the home economics and market-consumer research fields.

Just so we won't be accused of neglecting the writing profession, let's look around there a little bit, too.

This is a calling in which man was once all but supreme, particularly in journalism in the early, blood-and-thunder, knock-down-drag-out days of editors like Pulitzer, Greeley, and James Gordon Bennett.

Then, along came the first newspaperwoman—a "sob-sister" they called her then—a girl named Nellie Bly, and, today, women are plentiful in "The Fourth Estate" and there are several departments on plenty of major American daily newspapers that won't consider a man under any circumstances.

Women appear in practically all departments of magazines, too, and are more than holding their own in the book publishing business.

Most important, as queen of the American home, women direct more than 90 per cent of the nation's spending and control nearly 80 per cent of its cash and corporate wealth!

So who needs equality?

Who wants it?

Heaven forbid, though, that men, those poor dears, should lose out altogether.

June, 1953

GN

Romance in the Spring

A coy look, a ready smile fooled Junior, as they

1. Oh! A new neighbor. A cute little eyeful, too. She'll be a change from the local flossies who take a guy for granted and don't appreciate a ride on his scooter. Hiyah!

64

THE SIGN 1953

dren i dange

1. Junior! Junior! Aren't you ressing just a bit?

3. Maybe not. Looks like she is on the make.

1. "As one wolf to another—watch me go to town!"

I. The opening gambit. "Say it with flowers."

6. "I'll have you understand I'm a lady. Take that!"

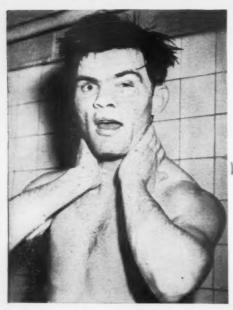

7. You have to get used to it, Pal. They give you the come-on, and then they start to play hard to get. But don't feel bad, there are other dames in this man's world.

What could be more fascinating than the budding of young romance in the spring? The young green tendrils sprouting on every side emphathe fact that spring is the logical time to cast aside old patterns and love the possibilities of intriguing new faces and make new friends. Detimes we adults are too bashful, self-conscious, and fumbling when somes to actually accomplishing such a great social achievement. But with dren it is different. They are not troubled by carefully nurtured inhibits; iron-bound customs are unheard of. Though young, they quickly unaffectedly learn the little tricks of acquiring new friends. There danger, as the young man above discovered, of trying to rush things.

A SIGN PICTURE STORY

Photos by Eric Wahleen

Tommy Collins. He showed raw courage unsurpassed in the annals of fistiana

DOXING, the so-called "manly art of self-defense," took a long step back into the Dark Ages on the occasion of the recent Jimmy Carter-Tommy Collins lightweight championship battle at Boston late in April. The "bout," referred to in newspaper headlines as the new Boston Massacre, was one of the worst in boxing history and certainly the most disgusting this observer ever had to broadcast. It didn't end in tragedy, which was a miracle, but if it doesn't do the sport of boxing irreparable harm, that will be a miracle too.

It is not our intention to recall at this time the bizarre and disgraceful circumstances of the third and fourth rounds of this "contest," but since this is the first opportunity we have had to write about the struggle and since our feelings are so strong, we will make these comments.

For once in a stormy aftermath of a prize ring explosion, no iota of blame has attached itself to the principals. In successfully defending his title with a fourth-round kayo, Jimmy Carter did what he was in there to do, his best. Outmatched and outgunned, through no fault of his own, Tommy Collins, the Boston home-bred, did his best too, and in arising from knockdown after knockdown and coming back for more, and getting it, as Carter's fists thundered home, he showed courage unsurpassed in the annals of fistiana.

Yes, no onus for this thing attached itself to Carter or his handlers, or to Tommy Collins, but others are to

by DON DUNPHY

One of the ten knockdowns. Though outclassed and thoroughly beaten, Collins received no mercy even from his handlers blame for this terrible exhibition witnessed by millions on television and heard by millions more on radio. The referee, Tommy Rawson, an ex-fighter himself, was the most culpable in permitting a fighter under his jurisdiction to be floored again and again, beaten almost to a pulp, arising groggy and almost senseless from the later knockdowns, and for permitting the fighter to careen unsteadily in the direction of his opponent's poised fists. Rawson stood by and counted while Collins was blasted to the canvas seven, yes seven, times in one round and three more times in the next. All this while, most of the more than 12,000 Collins rooters booed and begged that the fight be stopped. Finally, after the tenth knockdown, while Rawson was counting away, Collins' handlers got the idea and jumped in the ring to end the fight. They should have done it a lot sooner.

But the referee wasn't alone in the responsibility for this sickening thing. The commission doctor sat idly by through all this and made no move He didn't even bother to examine Collins between the third and fourth rounds. And he made no move during the three knockdowns of the next round.

And where were the boxing commissioners while this slaughter was going on? No one seems to know. They make no move to stop it. They finally put in an appearance the next day when they met and absolved the referee of all blame.

Boxing has been, is, and always will be a prime target for the reformers. If it is to survive as a sport, it must be kept clean and regulated well, within

66

THE SIGN

itsel he with F that Inci York and the how then eye at fa pens may peri

New T. I

twen

comp

inde York entir vigor

vear-

good deav

athle

New

just

of it

New

his r

at C a sta

also

and

Al

and hims

to t exist

was he s week

ten far i

by wone

Yo

prof

and

Colle

York

Xavi

Univ

June

In

A

Ju

itself. Unfortunately, boxing will always be hurt more from within than from without, of which the Boston case is an example.

Fortunately, this is an isolated case that nauseated the real boxing people. Incidents like the Carter-Collins scrap are rare, and the comments of New York Commissioner Bob Christenberry and of George Barton, President of the National Boxing Association, show distasteful such goings-on are to them. Unfortunately, it was a black eye to the innocent as well as to those at fault. Let's hope that it never happens again and that the sport of boxing may profit and learn from this hard experience.

An All-Time Great

When the Spiked Shoe Club of the New York A. C. elected Judge Jeremiah T. Mahoney as its President for 1953, it called to mind the fact that here is one of the great personalities of the twentieth century, for in a career encompassing more than fifty years as an athlete, sportsman, and public servant, Mr. Mahoney has made an indelible imprint on the life of New York City and in a lesser degree on the entire country. And now, as a very vigorous and youthful seventy-four-year-old, he is looking forward to a good many more years of useful endeavor.

Judge Mahoney, some time ago, was honored as one of the all-time great athletes of the College of the City of New York, but the city itself might just as well have honored him as one of its all-time great citizens.

A graduate of the public schools of New York, the future Judge early made his mark as a student and as an athlete at C.C.N.Y. In the latter field, he was a star broad and high jumper and was also a member of the baseball, football, and lacrosse teams.

Always an exponent of clean living and hard work, young Mahoney applied himself equally hard to athletics and to the more important struggle for existence. How much of a struggle it was can be seen from the fact that he started as a stock boy for $2 per week, for which he worked more than ten hours a day. But the hard work, far from hurting, actually helped him by laying a solid foundation to a wonderful life.

Young Mahoney early chose the legal profession and to that end worked for and received degrees of A.B. from City College, LL.B and LL.M. from New York University, A.M. from St. Francis Xavier College, and LL.D. from Lincoln University, Tennessee.

In an athletic career of more than eleven years, Jerry Mahoney won places in almost every event in track and field, in tennis and other sports. He once led an amateur baseball league with a .436 batting average and competed four times in the A.A.U. decathlon. He was a member of the United States Olympic team in 1904 and 1908 and qualified for, but did not compete in, the 1906 games.

Always a fighter for principle and for what he believed right, Judge Mahoney, as President of the A.A.U. in 1936, was the spearhead of a fight that split the organization down the middle, and though he lost his gallant battle, time soon proved him right. You may remember that the 1936 Olympic Games were scheduled for Berlin, Germany. Judge Mahoney didn't feel that this country should track and field meet by an A.A.U. team.

The public offices held by Judge Mahoney in his long and useful career are far too numerous to list in their entirety, but we can mention a few of them. He has served as Justice of the Supreme Court of the State of New York and Chairman of the Board of Judges of the First Judicial District, Judge of the Court of Special Sessions, and Deputy Police Commissioner of New York.

He was at one time Chairman of the New York Regional Labor Board, a member of the New York State Banking Commission, and a member of the New York Board of Education.

During the war, Judge Mahoney served on the First Enemy Alien Hearing Board.

A Regular Democratic candidate for Mayor of New York City in 1937, he was Spiked Shoe Officers: James Rafferty, Vice President, Judge Mahoney, President, John L. Flood, Secretary, and Henry Dreyer, Treasurer

send a team to these games because he believed that everything the Nazi Government stood for was a contradiction of the ideals of fair play which the Olympics stood for. He was defeated in his attempt to have the United States blacklist the games, and in protest he resigned all his Olympic offices. He received vindication the following year when he was swept back into the presidency of the A.A.U. in a stormy convention. He then showed his sagacity as well as his good sportsmanship by appointing Avery Brundage, his erstwhile opponent in the policy fight, as chairman of the International Relations Committee. following summer, Brundage's Committee vetoed participation in a German defeated by the incumbent, Fiorello LaGuardia.

A Roman Catholic, Mr. Mahoney is a parishioner of St. Ignatius Loyola Church in New York City.

The Judge is a widower and has two surviving children, Mrs. John Russell Hiibel and Lieut. Comdr. Jay-Ehret Mahoney, holder of the Silver Star Medal, the Order of Patriotic Wars, and eight other citations.

His has been a career of service to his fellow man, of hard work and a good, clean, and wholesome life. The youngsters who are to receive their diplomas this June might do well to learn something about the life of Judge Jeremiah T. Mahoney. They couldn't pick a better example to follow.

June, 1953

lone it

in the thing.

dly b move

xamin

fourt

durin

e nex

commi

s going

ey mad ally p

y who feree 0

ravs will formers

it must

l, within

E SIGN

Dooks

HOTEL TALLEYRAND

By Paul Hyde Bonner. 300 pages. Scribner's. $3.50

SPQR was writer-diplomat Paul Hyde Bonner's first novel, a well-received, crisply written story of the life of an American official attached to the Embassy at Rome, as affected by his relations with a group of Paul H. Bonner sophisticated internationals. His second novel, Hotel Talleyrand, is another skillfully written narrative of another American diplomat.

His prototype this time is S. Livingston Locke, former New York banker, now Chief of the Fiscal and Payments Branch of the Office of the E.C.A. in Paris. His wife, Eleanor, finds little warmth in her marriage, knowing that her husband is a coldly calculating man intent upon only the pursuit of an ambassadorship. The plot centers around the friendly interest she takes in Walter Haines, an economist attached to her husband's staff. This promising young man falls in love with an alluring Communist agent and unwittingly becomes a victim of Communist espionage. When Livingston decides selfishly to sacrifice his assistant instead of going to his aid, he not only loses his ambassadorship, but he loses his wife as well.

As a former Chief of E.C.A. the author was well acquainted with his setting, and his behind-the-scenes incidents from modern-day diplomacy are interesting and impressive. Overlooking one unnecessarily detailed assignation and odd interpretation of Catholic Action in France, Hotel Talleyrand compares favorably with SPQR.

GEORGE A. CEVASCO.

A WINDOW ON RED SQUARE

304 pages. By Frank Rounds, Jr. Houghton Mifflin. $3.00

Mr. Rounds was attached to the U.S. Embassy in Moscow through 1951 and half of 1952. His book gives an exciting series of insights into the "new civilization" of Soviet Russia, with its grandiose buildings, its gorgeous ballet, its frenzied chess tournaments, and its tragic foundations. While the record does not encourage wishful thinking concerning Communist plans, it does set the reader asking questions as to the means which Stalin's successors are likeliest to use, and the means by which the West's counterattack can be made to tell.

The author notes an official emphasis on visible progress which does not seem consistent with a policy of immediate warfare, and which, at the same time, offers a partial answer to the muchpublicized American standard of living. Conditions in the U.S.S.R., superficially, are improving-that fact must be faced. Prices are coming down. There is continually more and more to buy (including TV sets). Good music and good books are eagerly absorbed in vast quantities. The people retain a hunger for self-improvement, a healthy skepticism toward authority, and a fine, unsophisticated common sense, at which Mr. Rounds marvels.

Slavery, terrorism, spying, lying, all these evils he insists upon again and again. His own disgust with the system is clear. Still, he considers, it is delivering the goods well enough to stave off revolt.

Here is firsthand evidence that the anti-Communist battle cannot be won on a materialistic level. The true horror which Mr. Rounds tries to convey is a spiritual horror, and it is rightly on the spiritual values that he wants the West to ground its appeal.

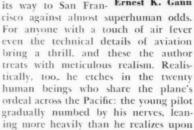

GEOFFREY ASHE.

THE HIGH AND THE MIGHTY

By Ernest K. Gann. Sloane Associates.

$3.50 If it had not already been pre-empted, Point of No Return would be the perfect title for this exciting saga of an airplane crippled far out from its starting point in Hawaii and fighting 342 pages.

Ernest K. Gann

ill-the woman who knows too much about the world and the one who knows too little-the failures and the "arrived" -the happy and the unhappy, who will learn at least something from facing mortal danger. They are not a very spiritual group and their language is often crude, but they claim compassion. And there is one brief sketch of the humblest of the passengers, "the small and willing hero" Jose, with his smile and his rosary and his unshakable faith in God, which the reader will not soon forget, KATHERINE BREGY.

THE REASON FOR ANN

By Myles Connolly. McMullen.

231 pages. $3.00

ter me rea

cha sm wa wh

ST

1

Sul

of fish

tell fan

nov

is c bi nos

nec

gen

fan

is 1

a n

was ting

his

and line

the

of t

scer

obli

onle

Bra

bro

ever

him

ean

ever

nov

Mon

age abou

kno

Brac

to 1

muc

strai

TH

B

Li

This

one ever

life

he scho

eral

June

T

In The Reason for Ann, Mr. Connolly's own selection of his most representative novelettes, we are given a successful demonstration of what can be done in this genre. The medium, as Mr. Connolly sees it, is clastic and at the same time firmly structured. In these six stories he manages to say a great deal about the human situation today. Most of the stories in this collection are real and moving, because, in spite of their casual quality, they are firmly held together. The characters move freely through the reader's imagination because the author has explored them fully and set them on their way.

The difference between the novelette and the short story is not primarily one of length but of structure-character can be developed in leisurely fashion in the novelette; action is not cramped, and the situation can be spread out or de veloped through cause and effect. All of these stories gain by having been told in the novelette form.

The title story is a diverting variation on the theme of heroic greatness to be found in Celtic legends. Two recording angels peer through the mists at the romantic posturing of the great O'Sullivan, who has almost no good marks in their ledger and is not likely to gain any as the story goes on, yet one of the angels can't help liking him-he makes sin sound so nice, and, after all, the cops are after him.

A number of these stories are sentimental in theme and treatment-what 68 man who hates and the man hopelessly We shall be pleased to fill your book orders

the supposedly outworn co-pilot-the

THE SIGN

the reader thinks of this will be a matter of taste—but it is clear that sentimentality is what the average magazine reader wants. The style lacks polish too. In spite of this, Connolly brings his characters close to the reader and many small scenes are put together in such a way as to hold the attention fixed on what the scene is meant to imply.

N. ELIZABETH MONROE.

STAGE OF FOOLS

ach

DWS

ed"

will ing

pir-

ten

And

lest ling

his

God,

rget.

3.00

olly

struc

nages

n sites in g, beuality.

char-

ader's

as ex-

m on velette

ly one er can

in the

1, and

or de-

All of

told in riation

s to be cording

the ro-

O'Sulli-

arks in to gain

of the makes all, the e senti-

t-what

SIGN

Y.

By Charles A. Brady. Dutton.

381 pages. $3.95

Sub-titled "A Novel of Sir Thomas More," this book is neither fish nor fowl. In retelling the life of a famous person in novel form, the author is competing with the biographer. The novelized version must necessarily compel the attention of the general reader who is unfamiliar with the subject, or revitalize an already familiar story. Mr. Brady's erudition is more evident than his technique as a novelist. Admittedly, the assignment was a difficult one. Selection and cutting was necessary, but the author crams his pages with a mass of minor details and characters that obscures the main line of the story.

Charles Brady

Too much of the action is related by the device of recollection on the part of the characters. Even in the final great scene at the scaffold, the narrative is oblique and More's famous last words are casually mentioned by one of the onlookers in a succeeding chapter. Mr. Brady is at his best in painting the broad canvas of the background of events and his ability as a poet helps him to create some of the vivid pageantry of the era. The historian, however, consistently overshadows the novelist.

The great message of Saint Thomas More's life is so appropriate to our age that too much cannot be written about him. Considering the profound knowledge of the subject which Mr. Brady manifestly possesses, it seems to me that his book would have had much more appeal if written as a straight biography.

DOYLE HENNESSY.

THE WARRIOR SAINT

By R. V. C. Bodley. 302 pages. Little, Brown. $4.00

This is the story of Charles de Foucald, one of the most extraordinary men who ever lived. The bare outline of his life is fantastic. Born in Alsace in 1858, he was a problem child, rebellious school boy, freethinker at fifteen, general hell raiser and libertine as a young

DELIGHTFUL GIFT CHOICES

For adults and younger readers

OUR LADY OF SPRINGTIME, by Sister Mary Jean Dorcy, O. P. Silhouettes, exquisitely delicate and fanciful, combined with Springtime verses—a book of unusual charm for art-lovers, shut-ins, June graduates and others. Expresses everything that the reader would wish to offer to Our Lady in the way of homage and love. 56 pp., with 24 silhouettes, $1.25

For the ten-to-fourteens

THE NATIONAL CATHOLIC ALMANAC PUZZLE AND QUIZ BOOK, compiled by Damien Wenzel, O.F.M. A bumper book of brain-teasers; crosswords, anagrams, number and novelty puzzles based on factual material contained in the Almanac. For solo fun, group contests, family circle entertainment. 52 pp., $1.00

Order from your bookstore, or direct from

Dept. 4-1813

ST. ANTHONY GUILD PRESS

PATERSON 3, NEW JERSEY

NEW

HISTORICAL NOVEL

STAR

By Sue Mildred Johnston

in religion Sister Mary Francis Johnston, OSU.

An adroit, suspenseful story which explores the historical data on the state of Catholics in Wales during the turbulent era of Queen Elizabeth.

Rowena Rafferty
THE CATHOLIC NEWS
$2.75

RECENT

SPIRITUAL READING

of FAITH

By Maria Teweles-Witt

A fine spiritual-reading book for lay Catholics who wish to grow in the appreciation of their faith and draw from it the happiness and encouragement which God intended it to give.

Charles Heiser, S. J.
CATHOLIC REVIEW SERVICE

AT YOUR BOOKSTORE

$2.50

OR FROM:

NOTRE DAME, INDIANA

Your children...how to get along with them!

Understand Them Better . . . Get More Joy Out of Being a Parent . . . Read the Real-Life Advice in These Two New Books:

1. Your pre-school child

YOUR FAMILY CIRCLE

BY SISTER JEAN PATRICE

Here are the answers to the most baffling problems with your pre-school child! Tells you what to do—and exactly how to do it—when your child says "I won't," when he shows off, when he's ringleader or sissy in a backyard battle. Hundreds of your questions answered with delightful insight into Catholic home life! $2.75

2. Your bewildering teen-ager

YOUR TEEN-AGERS

BY MRS. ALVENA BURNITE

A social worker and mother of three teens who has dealt first hand with the most difficult adolescent problems comes to your rescue with this complete guide. Sane, reassuring, wonderfully practical, it solves every dilemma, from dates and driving to adequate sex instruction. $2.95

ORDER YOUR COPIES TODAY FROM

The Bruce Publishing Company

206 Bruce Building Milwaukee 1, Wisconsin

BRUCE-MILWAUKEE:	Please sen	d me	cop of	YOUR
FAMILY CIRCLE of $		сор	of YOUR	TEEN-
AGERS at $2.95 each	1.

City______State_____State

June, 1953

Patronage of our advertisers helps THE SIGN

When the critics met the Walshes they all fell in love

BY WILLIAM E. WALSI

The long-awaited story of a large Catholic family, living, growing, loving, laughing and fighting their way through more than twenty of the toughest years Christian family life has ever known.

- e "Delightful reading for everyone, from the monk in his cell to the old lady who lived in a shoe."-JULIE KERNAN, The Rosary
- · "A family chronicle that moves as swiftly as an adventure story and reads like a romantic novel."-Boston Globe
- · "Required reading in every course dealing with marriage."-MARY STACK McNiff, America
- · "A warming and hopeful book about people who in each other and in their God, knew and found what they wanted."-N. Y. Herald Tribune
- · "Full of chuckles . . . yet marked by a seriousness which proves . . . a genuine understanding of the art of Christian and Catholic living."-The Vincentian

With drawings by REISIE LONETTE

A selection of The Catholic Literary Foundation

At all bookstores • $3.00

P. J. KENEDY & SONS 12 Barclay Street New York 8, N. Y.

man. Dismissed from the French army for insubordination, he became a pioneer explorer, Trappist monk, priest, ascetic desert hermit, was assassinated in the Sahara in 1916, and has been proposed for beatification.

In a dramatic return to the faith at the age of twenty-eight, this man of extremes became a Trappist monk, but before he took his final vows he was back in the desert with a dream of founding a new order. After an incredible life of hardship during which time he became a priest without parishioners, he could not find a single postulant to share the rigors of his proposed order and made only one convert.

"More admirable than imitable," what he accomplished in the Sahara is often questioned. Undeniably concerned with enhancing French prestige, he also lived a fanatical but saintlike existence. The author of this book, an Englishman who lived seven years as an Arab nomad, is well qualified to describe the adventurous aspects of Foucald's life. A non-Catholic, he acknowledges his debt to Ann Fremantle for advice on Catholic matters and for information supplied in her own book on the subject, Desert Calling.

It is doubtful if the last word has yet been said on the life of the remarkable Foucald, but this readable book is well worth attention.

DOYLE HENNESSY.

PARISH PRIEST

By LeRoy E. McWilliams. 250 pages. $3.75 McGraw-Hill.

This is Father McWilliams' story of his life and his work at St. Michael's Church in Jersey City, where he has been stationed since 1918. It traces his rise from the days when he was the youngest curate on the Fr. McWilliams staff to his present pastorship. The parish is seven blocks in one direction and eight in another, and in it are 1,000 Catholic families. It is in a tenement district hard by the entrance to the Holland Tunnel, which has seen its best economic days; and its population is Irish, Polish, and Italian. It is a parish to prove the mettle of a man.

And it was in the spirit of challenge that Father McWilliams first undertook his duties, and that spirit, it is obvious from his book, has never deserted him. Father McWilliams writes modestly, perhaps too much so, in view of what he has accomplished. He tells simply, for instance, of the physical rebuilding of the church and school; but he tells by indirection only of his own energizing

PROFESSOR FOSTER'S AMAZING DISCOVERY Brings Real Joy To Every Cleaning Task

M

eno

An

you

AN

Rev

reis

Che

PR

inco

prog

that

HE

main

with matt

TH

Vol.

conta

Perso

Chri.

Vol.

conta

The

Doct

Vol.

Life.

tianu

Come

THE

By T

O.S.E

the dexed

EDV

By M

teresti

to ga whose and a

TH

WITH only one bottleing detergent, your cottons, nylons, rayons - yes, and woolens, come clean as driven snow. Perfect, too, for silverware, china and glass. You'll say it's amazing.

John Sexton & Co., Sexton Square, Chicago, III.

JOHN McCORMACK

DOMESTIC AND IMPORTED RECORDS

Catholic and Irish Records Catalogue Mailed Free on Request

Blarney Castle Products Co. Box 102, Times Plaza Station Brooklyn 17, N. Y.

YOU MAKE $50.00

for yourself, Sodality, School or organiza-tion selling 100 boxes of brand new 1953

CATHOLIC CHRISTMAS CARDS

Other fast money makers. Write for samples on approval.

ROBINSON CARDS Dept. D-22 Clinton, Mass.

SIGN SUBSCRIBERS CANADA

You may send your payments to THE SIGN

Passionist Fathers Box 64, Station K Toronto, Ontario

THE SIGN

Recent Books

MICKEY THE ANGEL

By William P. Gillooly, illustrated by Margaret Ahern—This book is just big enough to tell the tale of Mickey the Angel, startlingly vivid and real. When the words have died away the clean freshness of the story will stay with you. $2.50

AN ANTHOLOGY OF CATHOLIC POETS

Revised and enlarged edition edited by Shane Leslie—First published in 1925, this comprehensive anthology is now reissued with important revisions, notably the inclusion of verses by Belloc and Chesterton, to bring it up to date. $3.00

PROGRESSIVE EDUCATORS AND THE CATHOLIC CHURCH

By Very Rev. Joseph McGlade, S.S.C.—In this study the author points out many inconsistencies and pernicious teachings in modern education and shows that progressivism is an empty philosophy that does untold harm. $3.25

HEARTBREAK EARTH

By A Carmelite Nun—The author of World Without End, Each Hour Remains, and Our Eternal Vocation gives us another book along the same lines and again Sister Imelda graces the pages with her shrewd and wise advice on matters spiritual. $3.00

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF ABBOT VONIER

ED

İs

10

LS

, Mass.

RS

nts to ntario

E SIGN

Vol. I: The Incarnation and Redemption, containing The Christian Mind, The Personality of Christ, The Victory of Christ and The Divine Motherhood.

Vol. II: The Church and the Sacraments, containing The Spirit and the Bride, The People of God and A Key to the Doctrine of the Eucharist.

Vol. III: The Soul and the Spiritual Life, containing The Human Soul, Christianus and The Life of the World to Come.

THE IMITATION OF CHRIST

By Thomas a Kempis, newly translated and edited by Abbot Justin McCann, O.S.B.—An entirely new translation of the Imitation attractively printed, indexed and bound in a pocket-sized format.

Boxed $2.50

EDWARD LEEN, C.S.Sp.

By Michael O'Carroll, C.S.Sp.—An interesting biography of Father Leen, the first spiritual writer in modern Ireland to gain international recognition, and whose influence as a preacher of retreats and a director of souls was vast. $3.50

Wherever good books are sold

THE NEWMAN PRESS

Westminster, Maryland

role in keeping his parish spiritually alive and healthy.

Father McWilliams does know, however, what makes him tick. It is his faith and his love of people. About both he writes eloquently and with rich warmth. He is at his best when relating stories of his parish work, with its heartaches, its joys, and its humorous moments. It takes a man of understanding and maturity to be able to share, as does Father McWilliams, the intimate lives of his people. It is these qualities that make his autobiography rewarding reading for the Catholic, and also for the non-Catholic. Priests are human, and to learn how their humanity is fortified, Parish Priest is the book for you.

ALDEN WHITMAN.

THE RIFLEMAN

By John Brick. Doubleday. 349 pages. $3.75

Some of the bravest and most valuable soldiers of the Revolutionary War were the Riflemen of Daniel Morgan's Company. One of these is Tim Murphy, Pennsylvania woodsrunner and Indian fighter who joined up after he was jilted by the tantalizing Marian Greene. Tim becomes famous for bravery in battle and expert marksmanship with his specially built double-barreled Golcher rifle. He and his good friend Dave Elerson have some exciting close shaves with the Indians and win a few scalps for themselves in the bargain,

John Brick

Not So Dumb

► The new hired hand was not very bright, but the farmer had succeeded in drilling into his mind that work well planned was half done.

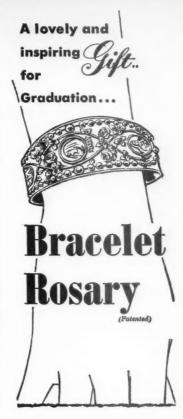

One day, the boy was sent to gather a pile of stones for a new fence. At noon, the farmer asked how he was getting along.

"Half done," was the reply.
"Fine," applauded the boss.
"How many piles of stones did

"How many piles of stones did you gather?"

"Oh, none," the lad replied.
"But I planned where to put them when I get them."

-Dorothy Holden

The new Bracelet Rosary, beautifully fashioned of pure silver, contains the complete Rosary as well as medals of The Blessed Mother, St. Therese and St. Christopher.

The Bracelet Rosary, which has received the full approval of the Holy See, enables you to pray the Rosary, without attracting attention while traveling or in public places,

Inside the Bracelet Rosary are stamped the days when the Mysteries should be recited. There is also space for name, address and blood type.

An inspiring Gift.

A cherished possession!

L
E. J. TOWLE COMPANY	1
1239 Howard Street
San Francisco 3, Calif.	Dept. S-4
Please send meBra (individually boxed) a (Fed. Tax incl.) postpo check or money order	it $5.00 each
Name Address
City	Zone
State

No Other Folding Kneeler Chair Like This ... Combines Seating and Kneeling...Beauty and Comfort

Many uses: In the Sanctuary . . . as a pew extender for overflow crowds . . . For Lectures . . . Dinners . . . Entertainments.

The kneeler is a built-in part of the chair and folds automatically as the chair folds. It also folds up and locks out of the way when the chair is needed for regular seating only. This steel chair folds to flat 2" thickness for safe, non-wobbly stacking in minimum space-has Clarin famous lasting baked enamel finishchoice of luxurious mohair or leatherette upholstery-several beautiful color combinations supremely comfortable for sitting or kneeling.

Clarin Mfg. Company, Dept. 21. 4640 W. Harrison St., Chicago 44, Ill.

SINCE 1925...THE ARISTOCRAT OF FOLDING CHAIRS

PRICED AT ONLY

Write for:

chair.

Beautiful, new

Free Catalogue

showing entire

Clarin line including unique new folding tablet arm

SEND CHECK OR MONEY ORDER NO C.O.D.'s PLEASE.

THE IDEAL GIFT - OUR LORD "IN LIVING SCULPTURE"

This beautiful hand-painted porcelain statue with This beautiful hand-painted porcelain statue with 22-karat gold trim is a replica of the widely ac-claimed head of Our Lord which is the main fea-ture of the altar in the new Church of the Blessed Sacrament in Queens, N. Y. A three-dimensional sculpture, 10 inches high, gives living features to the face. Wherever you go the eyes appear to "watch over you." Every Catholic home should be graced with this impassioned and visual reminder of the face of Our Saviour. Ideal for Father's Day gift or graduation.

251 WEST 57th ST. N.Y.

IF & WHEN You Move, Please Remember to Send Your Old AND New Address to THE SIGN

CAMP ST. JOHN'S

A Lakeside Mountain Camp
Boys 6-16, 2500 ft. Alt. Sandy beach on Hunter Lake. 100 ml. from N. Y. C. Modern buildings.
Lavatory in each cabin. Hot showers, Arresian well.
Excellent meals. Diversified activities—recreational and instructional. Mature professional staff. $450, season. Catalog. Robt. D. Giegengack, Yale Univ.
A.A., New Haven. Conn., or phone Fordham 5-6567
(Bronx): Virginia 7-3518 (Woodhawen). Directors:
Rev. Herbert J. McElroy, Robt. Giegengack.

VACATION IN VERMONT

Enjoy sightseeing tours to Montreal's Shrines: Ausoble Chasm; chair-lift to top of Mt. Manslield. Nightly dancing; all sports. Near Catholic Church. Rates $40.00 to $45.00. Includes meals. Write for booklet "N."

MAYFAIR MANOR HIGHGATE FALLS, VERMONT

CHURCH OF OUR LADY OF LOURDES CAMPS

OUR LADY OF LOURDES Camp for Girls 6-18

CAMP ACADIA for Boys-6 to 16

Separate Camps for boys and girls, 1 mile apart. 1600 acres on two private lakes in Catskill Mts. 47th year. Riding, Sailing, Swimming, Tennis, Baseball, Fishing, Dramatics, Trips, Arts & Crafts, etc. Excellent staff and equipment. Resident priests, doctor and nurses. Fee $400. Catalog. Rev. James V. Hart, President

Write to: REV. VINCENT S. CLYNE, Director

Phone: WA 6-2310

New York 31, N. Y.

It takes most of the War for Tim to get Marian out of his system, but he is helped by Dave's understanding, Marian's death at the hands of Indians, and his meeting with the lovely Peggy Feeck of Schoharie in New York State. Peggy is not a simple solution, however, for her father puts up opposition of the stubbornest kind. Aided by the garrison's commander and some of the townspeople, Tim and Peggy are able to get married without the elder Feeck's knowledge. When he finally consents to recognize his son-in-law, Tim and Peggy go to live with the Feecks only to find that there is a chronically irritating difference between the two men.

An important achievement of this book is the gradual maturing of Tim Murphy from a silent, easily angered young trapper to the warmer, self-controlled husband. Sexy scenes and profanity mar the first part of the book, whose real worth is mainly in the historical background.

PAULA BOWES.

office

1 50

CHA

R00/

M1

OF ...

1935 Ge

he reig

the reig modern | ing the r to-get st icu Is., c (reg. $2.1 gain Ap FREE—" SEND ZENITH

THE LIFE OF ARCHBISHOP JOHN IRELAND

441 pages. By James H. Moynihan. Harper. $5.00

"The Church is a foreign institution. Yes, if the Saviour of the world is a foreigner, and the Bishop of Rome as His vicar is a foreigner. The Catholic Church is extra-American, supranational, begotten for all nations-a foreigner on no spot of the earth's surface. Catholics demand no special power-merely equal rights for all. The rights of Catholics are the rights of the personal conscience of the Catholic citizen." This might have been written in defense of the Church against the attacks of a Blanshard or a Conant. But it is Archbishop Ireland speaking his mind in 1913 during one of those waves of opposition that the Catholic has come to expect.

J. Moynihan

One is amazed at the white-hot zeal of this "Apostle of the West." And the amazement grows with each chapter of his career. Striding from simple priest to Archbishop of St. Paul, he became an eminent churchman, statesman, friend of the presidents, a champion of a dozen great causes: and he lived out his creed: "Not to know one's rights is low-mindedness, not to defend them is cowardice" The Pope sought his help in trying to prevent the Spanish-American war, senators asked his advice, capital and labor put their cause before him. Truly ht was a giant in the field.

Monsignor Moynihan, formerly president of the College of St. Thomas in St. Paul, has written not only a lively

72

Chaplains and missionaries appreciate gift subscriptions to THE SIGN

THE SIGN

BO

VANTAGE

une, 1

In Cali

MITCHELL MANUFACTURING CO. 2748 5. 34th St., Milwoukee 46. Wis., Dept. S.

BRITISH EMPIRE VALUARIF OF... STAMPS for 25¢ includes Rare MAURITIUS

i.

gy

lif-

his

im

on.

oro

ook.

his

s.

iges.

5.00

han

f the d no

ts for e the

of the e been gains

onant

eaking

those atholic

ot zeal

nd the pter of priest

ame an friend

a dozen

s creed:

w-mind-

ardice."

rying to ar, sen-

nd labor

ruly he ly presi

omas in a lively

Pinest collection ever offered at this low, low price! Pinest collection ever offered at this low, low price! Pinest collection of the relation of the relatio

ACCORDIONS

FAMOUS ITALIAN MAKES

The Vatican's Choice Offered to Students, Teachers, Professionals, and Church Groups—DIRECT at

WHOLESALE PRICES
Illustrated folder FREE—Write TODAY!
Accordion Manufacturers & Wholesalers Outlet
Dept. TS, 2003 W. Chicago Ave., Chicago 22, Ill.

Carmen SCAPULAR Guild 20 Southampton St. Bx 12C Buffalo 9, New York

Woven WASHABLE Scapulars made with Silver Chains or Tapes . . .

PRICE LIST on request

MAKE & SELL RELIGIOUS JEWELRY

Make big profits at home. Assemble and sell easy to make beautiful Religious Lucite Jewelry. Send 10¢ for literature.

ABBEY JEWELERS PROD. Box 176 N. Y. C. 8

If & WHEN You Move Please Remember to Send Your Old AND New Address to THE SIGN

BOOK MANUSCRIPTS INVITED

I you looking for a publisher? Send for our free, surated bookiet titled To the Author in Search of a diskater. It tells how we can publish, promote and dislate your book, as we have done for hundreds of other Bust. All subjects considered. New authors welcomed.

Write today for Booklet SN. It's free.

WANTAGE PRESS, Inc., 120 W. 31 St., N.Y. 1 In Calif .: 6356 Hollywood Blvd., Hollywood 28

biography but a well-documented history about a turbulent period of the Church's growth in the United States.

JOHN L. MADDEN.

WHAT AMERICA MEANS TO ME

By Francis Cardinal Spellman. $2.50 Scribner's. 111 pages.

The versatile and indefatigable Cardinal of New York gives us here a new collection of prayers and poems -fortunately including some previously published-for life in the modern world. And for those who must live this life it would seem that man has never needed guidance more imperatively, in both spiritual and temporal problems. Cardinal Spellman writes with extraordinary insight into our problems, our limitations, our potentialities. And often there is added to this paternal, compassionate insight the fresh vision of eternal youth-as when he says of resurrection, "man need not wait for death bravely to rise;" or of charity, "Come, let us give to God this day His bread;" or in the midst of a "Creed for Capital and Labor," he breaks suddenly into a meditation upon the six symbolic days when "God labored" to prepare the earth for uncreated man.

Cardinal Spellman

These meditations are usually in prose; the prayers-for soldiers and children, for workers in and out of the religious life, for America, the world and peace-usually in verse. And characteristically, His Eminence uses, with an almost faultless sense of rhythm, the free verse which has been a mark of the newer American poetry. Here is a poignant Christmas prayer for the "expended and expendable" boys in Korea -and a New Year's message from them to us, colloquial as a daily newspaper, and at once heartbreaking and heartlifting.

KATHERINE BREGY.

CALVARY IN CHINA

By Robert W. Greene, M.M. Putnam. 244 pages. $3.50

When the Communists "liberated" the village of Tung-an in southwest China, a Communist soldier painted a large sign on the wall of Father Greene's mission compound. It read: Tsung

Chiao Tzu Yu-Free Robert W. Greene dom of Religion. That was in Decemanother gay adventure! Just Published!

By Margaret Carroll and Jerry McCue, the creators of our other cartoon success "Convent Belies" BRAND, BRAND NEW is this hilarious book is this hilarious book of cartoons. Go rollicking along through these 80 pages of gay adventures with Nuns, Priests and Parish People in some very funny gags and situaations. It's very gay!

DON'T MISS THIS ONE!

YOU'LL LOVE IT!

at all bookshops, church goods stores or direct ABBEY BOOKS • P.O. 405, Greenwich 4, Conn.

"The Mass in Pictures"

by Rev. William J. Kenney Pastor of St. Florence's Parish, Wakefield

May be obtained through Matthew Shee-han's Religious Goods in Boston or by writing to Box 327, Wakefield, Mass.

Please write Dept. S.

CALLING ALL WOMEN

50 Golden Hours of Retreat In Historic Old New England

The Passionist Sisters Retreat House

about midway between New York and Boston on the New Haven Railroad. Modern Accommodations for individuals or groups on any weekend. Renowned Retreat Preachers. Picturesque grounds. Excellent cuisine.

MOTHER M. CLOTILDE, C. P.

IMMACULATE HEART RETREAT HOUSE

Peace Dale, Rhode Island (Tel. NArragansett 3-2761)

LEARN AT HOME TO HELP THE SICK

There's always a demand—at high pay—for those skifled in caring for the sick, You can learn in spare time to be a nurse's aide, practical nurse or infant nurse. Men and women, 18-60. High school not required! Physicians endorse course; graduates get jobs outckly. Easy payments; earn as you learn. Trial plan. 54th year. CHICAGO SCHOOL OF NURSING Drt.206, 41 East Pearson Street, Chicago 11, Ill. Please send me free booklet and 16 sample lesson pages.

Name _

SIGN | me, 1953

Conformity Plus!

▶ Our Holy Father might think that some nuns had taken too seriously his suggestions about modernizing their habits, if he could see the cleaning bill recently sent to a Presentation Sister.

The large outer sleeves worn by the nuns are detachable and joined together by a piece of material fastened to the back of the dress waist. When Sister Mary's habit came back from the cleaners, she opened the enclosed statement.

"One dress," she read, "three dollars and fifty cents."

And, just below it, in a rather uncertain hand: "One pair slacks—one dollar."

-Sister Mary Gilbert

ber, 1949. On Easter Sunday of 1952, the sign still proclaimed the right of man to worship as he thought right, but Father Greene stood before a bloodthirsty mob of thousands and heard a satanic judge condemn him to death by decapitation. He was spared this fate only by the "mercy" of Mao.

Long confinement, degradations, and steadily mounting pressures had broken his body and all but broken his mind. But throughout the trial he refused to yield on two points: that he was a validly ordained priest and not a spy, and that the Legion of Mary was not an international espionage network. And he was virtually obsessed with the determination to rescue the Blessed Sacrament, which was hidden in his room.

At first glance this book may seem to be just another of the numerous accounts of Communist terrorism. But Calvary In China does not merely recount Communist methods of bending the will and twisting the mind. It casts sharp light on the Communist hypocrisy of outwardly espousing the principle of freedom of religion while covertly working for its destruction.

If Calvary In China had no value from the viewpoint of current events (and it has), it would remain valuable for its ruthless honesty. To give an instance: that Father Greene would tell that in a moment of mental paralysis he had begun the physical act of suicide is almost as startling as the fact itself.

PAT GAVAN RILEY.

GOOD MORNING, YOUNG LADY

Ardyth Kennelly. 469 pages. Houghton Mifflin. $3.95

Good Morning, Young Lady gets the palm leaf fan for the sweetest, simplest, and most girlish novel of 1953.

Its heroine, Dorney Leaf, is Cinderella come to Salt Lake City. A beautiful, smart, orphan lass, she is forced to move in with a mean and silly elder sister, Madge. She has hardly settled in her attic room when Madge sends her out to work by day in a rich lady's kitchen. (Two dollars a week was standard wage for the hired girl, apparently, in Mormon country, back in the 90's.) Fired from there, Dorney does a turn in a sweat shop laundry. But do rotten luck and nasty relatives mar the beauty of her face and character? No, indeed. Everyone but her immediate family seems to dote on Dorney, and before you know it she has been courted by a bandit on the run and ends up with her dream prince come true.

Miss Kennelly's prose is late Victorian American provincial. It gushes, flutters, and simpers; embroidered with literary allusions which are about as suitable as lace ruffles on a rag rug.

Sometimes, particularly when Dorney and her eerie kinsfolk are off-stage, minor characters bring the book to life. Clara Tofflemire and her shy suitor, and Alma Morelewski conning "The Etiquette of Today" have both comedy and pathos. They deserve to grace a better novel, and show how well Miss Kennelly can write when she has a mind to.

If it were just a little more absurd, Good Morning, Young Lady could be a parody in the style of Aurora Dawn. As it stands, it is sort of an answer to a not too bright maiden's prayer for light summer reading.

CLORINDA CLARKE.

MARY MAGDALENE

By Raymond-Leopold Bruckberger Pantheon, 192 pages. $3.00

No doubt we Catholics of North America could enrich our lives by a warmer devotion to Saint Mary Magdalen, but whether many of us can follow Father Bruckberger's volume to its logical conclusion is an open question. That the Dominican author-former Chaplain General of the French Resistance at present residing in Minnesota-is a powerful and poetic writer no one familiar with his delightful "parables" or his autobiographical One Sky to Share can doubt. Nor can anyone doubt that his present work is one of great love and learning. The teasing problem concerns the use and abuse of imagination. For his pet hypothesis seems to be that Mary of Bethany was a Hellenized Jewess who summed up the pagan Greek quest for wisdom and beauty as John the Baptist typified the quest of the Hebrew prophets for the coming Messias. It is an interesting viewpoint -until it insists upon linking the Magdalen with Phryne the courtesan. Antigone, the Diotima of Plato, and the Well Beloved of the Canticles! This same imaginative opulence is applied to the sparse but thrilling Gospel narrative, and we find ourselves assured that Mary, although a "great lady" by birth, was early debauched at Herod's court, where she was the intimate companion of Salome-that she was healed of disease as well as seven devils by Christ-that she, rather than any mysterious dream, persuaded Pilate's wife to intercede for Jesus-etc., etc. Indeed the whole story is so full of fantasy that its conclusion-a retelling of the charming tradition of Mary's death in Provence after her transportation to Gaul in a sailless ship, along with Lazarus and Martha-is not in the least startling. E

A

MO

Beard

Direc

Grad

Class

Cour

COL

A Ca Charit women require tration ing, n

For in

MC

C

The book is exquisitely printed and illustrated. What the present reviewe has been unable to decide is whether it is to be taken as Scriptural exeges or fictionized biography.

KATHERINE BREGY.

BARBE ACARIE— WIFE AND MYSTIC

By Lancelot C. Sheppard. 210 pages McKay. $3.50

Found, at long last, and under the proper imprimatur, a writer who, dealing with a married mystic, dares to say: "Marriage is not the 'second best thing' to a religious vocation; it is a different vocation...

L. C. Sheppard

but marriage if it is a man's or a woman's vocation is the best and highest state for them and in it Christian life may be lived to the full." Marriage was Barbe Acarie's vocation in which she found personal sanctity and by means of which she restored the life of the Church in France during the sixteenth century. Her life demonstrates two profound truths: namely, that the

THE SIGN

Rhinect conductored occredit located 7th and All new further further B. How

June

EDUCATIONAL DIRECTORY

ARCHMERE ACADEMY

in

at me

ubt

eat

lem

agi.

10

lengan

utv

ues

ing

oin

the san.

This

lied

nar-ured

by rod's

com

ealed

s by mys-

wife

deed

that arm-

Prov-

ul in and tling.

and iewer

ether

egesi

REGY

pages.

$3.50

ppard

or a highest an life

arriage

which ind by life of

he sixnstrates

hat the

SIGN

Accredited boys' prep school under Norbertine Canons. High School only. Limited enrollment, resident or day. Sports, public speaking, social activities. Moral and spiritual guidance. Cata-

Very Reverend Headmaster Box 67-S, Claymont, Delaware

MOUNT ST. CHARLES ACADEMY

Boarding School for BOYS Woonsocket, R. I. Directed by the Brothers of the Sacred Heart. Grade 8, through High School, State Accredited Classical, Scientific, Commercial, and General Courses. Very moderate rates. Write for catalog.

Caldwell College for Women

Conducted by the Sisters of St. Dominic CALDWELL, NEW JERSEY Fully Accredited

Offering A.B. and B.S. Degrees Teacher and Secretarial Training

GEORGIAN COURT COLLEGE

Lakewood, New Jersey

Four-year course leading to B.A. and B.S. degrees

Liberal Arts: Fine Arts: Science: Music: Teacher Training: Home Economics: Business Administration.

Fully Accredited.

COLLEGE OF SAINT ELIZABETH

A Catholic college conducted by the Sisters of Charity. Founded in 1899, it is the oldest college for women in New Jersey and meets in full all standard requirements. Regular arts courses, business administration, home economics, pre-medical, teacher training, music. B.A. and B.S. degrees.

For information address: Director of Admissions Convent Station, N. J.

ACADEMY OF OUR LADY OF THE BLESSED SACRAMENT

In toothills of the Ramapo mountains, 60 miles from New York City, Grades 7-12, College preparators and Commercial courses. Study balanced with whole-ome outdoor activities. Horseback riding, tennis, swimming, ice skating, skiing. Moderate rates. Dominiena Bisters.

For catalog address Sister Principal Box-S, Broadlea, Goshen, N. Y.

MOUNT SAINT MARY

ON-THE-HUDSON

All grades complete from first to twelfth. State-chartered; accredited, Middle States. Preparation for college, business, life. Character development and health stressed. Homelike personal supervision. Fire-proof building; beautiful 42-acre campus. Illustrated Catalog.

SISTERS OF ST. DOMINIC Newburgh, N. Y.

LA SALLE Military Academy

Foremost Catholic military school under Foreinss Carroine mintary Sendo under Christian Brothers. Accredited college prep. Grades 8-12. Small classes. Com-plete facilities for spiritual development, intellectual progress. Senior ROTC. 160-acre campus. 70th year. 50 miles N.Y.C. Catalog. Box S. Oakdale, L. I., N. Y.

CARDINAL FARLEY MILITARY ACADEMY

MILITARY ACADEAN

Rhinecliff, New York. Accredited High School conducted by the Christian Brothers of Ireland, accredited by New York State Board of Regents; located on a 90-acre estate on the scenic Hudson;
7th and 8th grades and four years of High School;
All new fireproof Dormitories. ROTC (55C-NDA). For further information write the principal, Rev. Bro. W.
8. Howling.

contemplative is no sentimental dreamer but a human dynamo who produces, and that marriage is no hindrance to the highest activity of Christian life.

Blessed Mary of the Incarnation, widow, made her contribution, the French Carmelite foundation, as Barbe Acarie, wife of Pierre Acarie and mother of six children. She was Pierre's wife for twenty-seven years, a Carmelite lay sister for only four years after his death, in 1613. By that time she had achieved her life mission, had converted thousands, reformed religious houses, and established the Carmelites in France.

While the approach here is somewhat different in respect of the emphasis on her marriage, the pattern of sanctity is the old familiar one of heroic virtue practiced against tremendous odds, of humility rooted in acknowledgement of personal nothingness, of physical weakness supported by potent spiritual reserves. One curious result must be noted. As the subject of the book, Madame Acarie commands an intellectual admiration and respect but fails to win a warm sympathy. That is reserved for her husband. Pierre, who if he did not die in the odor of sanctity himself, lived close to it as the husband of a living saint, a circumstance which requires a heroism of its own.

FORTUNATA CALIRI.

SHORT NOTICES

OUT OF RED CHINA. By Liu Shaw-Tong. 269 pages. Little, Brown. $4.00. The things to come in Oceania in 1984, of which George Orwell announced the shape, are ahead of schedule in the China of Mao Tse-Tung in 1950, shown to us in this book. A reader of both books cannot fail to be struck by the literal parallel between so much of what we could still regard as satirical fantasy in Orwell and the appalling realities described by Liu Shaw-Tong. This is an account of the working out of the Marxist-Leninist Revolution in China on the level of the daily life of ordinary mortals. We see party members besotted and dehumanized by the semantic mumbo-jumbo of the party line; the people, scornfully designated as "the masses," flattened out by the ruthless steamroller of the Revolution. The author was a student at Peking University when the Revolution caught up with him, an engaging young man, witty, clever, anxious to get on, intelligent. He stood it-more than that, he tried to take part in it, for a little over a year and then managed to get out to tell us about it.

TO THE BULLFIGHT. By John Marks. 147 pages. Knopf. $3.00. To Ladycliff College

Highland Falls, New York

Four-Year Course leading to the De-gree of Arts, Science, Education LADYCLIFF ACADEMY for Girls—A Chartered Regents High School—Commercial Electives.

Resident and Day Students

ACADEMY OF MOUNT SAINT VINCENT

Tuxedo Park, New York Founded 1847

Beautiful school for girls, grades 7 to 12. One hour from New York. Fully accredited. Strong college preparation & general course. Art, music, home economics, riding, dramatics. Write for catalogue.

OUR LADY OF MERCY ACADEMY

Syosset, Long Island, New York. Boarding and Day School for Girls. Affiliated with the State University. Grades 7 through 12.

School buses leave from Jamaica, Hempstead, Great Neck, and Man-hasset. Bus also meets trains at Syosset. School Session 10 a.m. — 3:45 p.m.

Conducted by THE SISTERS OF MERCY

FORDHAM UNIVERSITY

NEW YORK 58, N. Y.

Founded in 1841, Conducted by the Jesuits

FORDHAM CAMPUS DIVISION, Fordham Road, New York 58, N. Y.

Fordham College of Arts and Sciences; Graduate School of Arts and Sciences; College of Pharmacy; School of Busi-

CITY HALL DIVISION, 302 Broadway, New York 7, N. Y.

School of Education, School of General Studies, School of Law, School of Busi-

SOCIAL SERVICE DIVISION, 134 East 39 St., New York 16, N. Y. School of Social Service

SUMMER SESSIONS

City Hall Division (Evenings)—June 22-August 13.

Campus Division-July 6-August 14. Catalogues of Each School sent on Request

GOOD COUNSEL COLLEGE WHITE PLAINS NEW Westchester County NEW YORK

Conducted by the Sisters of the Divine Compassion FULLY ACCREDITED B.A. and B.S. Degrees Standard Courses in Arts and Science, pre-medical, journalism, teacher training, secretarial studies, fine arts. Unusually beautiful location. Extensive campus.

Forty minutes from New York City.

MARYWOOD COLLEGE

Accredited Catholic college for women.

B.A., B.A., B.S., B.A., B.S., M. M.A. degrees. Newly-completed multimillion of the company three beautifully modern halls of residence, fine arts and science; theater, and gymnasium with largest pool in the East. Liberal arts, vocational home economics, music (NASM. Acc.), art, secretarial, teaching (elementary, secondary), librarianship (AIA Acc.), drama, radio, psychology, social service, science, medical technology, Homor societies. Clubs, publications, sports. Catalog. Conducted by the Sisters, Servants of the Immaculate Heart of Mary. Registrar, Marywood College, Box $, $cranton, Pa.

June, 1953

Patronage of our advertisers helps THE SIGN

COLLEGE OF MOUNT SAINT VINCENT

Mount St. Vincent-on-Hudson, New York 71, N. Y.

CONDUCTED BY THE SISTERS OF CHARITY

Offers A.B. and B.S. Degrees, Liberal Arts, Nursing, Commerce, Education, and Teacher Training Accredited by the Association of American Universities.

Campus bordering Hudson River © One half hour from Grand Central Station, New York City Address Secretary

College of New Rochelle

New Rochelle, New York Conducted by the Ursuline Nuns

Westchester County-Sixteen Miles From Grand Central Station, New York City

RAVENHILL

ACADEMY OF THE ASSUMPTION

• Fully accredited. Cultural atmosphere. Pre-school through high school for girls. Boarding and day. College preparatory, art, music, family living, secretarial. Post-graduate. Small classes. Sports, swimming, riding. Wooded 27-acre campus overlooking Philadelphia. Transfer to Florida available during winter. Schools also in Paris, London, Rome, Catalog. Dept. 8, 3480 W. School House Lane, Germantown, Philadelphia 44, Pa.

IMMACULATA COLLEGE

Accredited Liberal Arts college for women. B.A., B.S., B.Mus. degrees. Selence, music, business, home economics teacher training, pre-med, pre-law, 20 miles from Philadelphia overlooking beautiful Chester Valley. Stimulating social and sports program. Dramatic and musical productions with nearby men's colleges. Cheerful, homelike use units, freproof buildings. Pool. Farm and dairy. East of the Bisters, Servinuming and canceling. Conducted by the Sisters, Servinuming and canceling theat of Mary. Catalog on request. Conducted by the Sisters, Servants of the Imms Heart of Mary. Catalog on request. Registrar, Box G, Immaculata College, Immaculata, Pa.

ROSEMONT COLLEGE

Rosemont, Pennsylvania Conducted by the Sisters of the Holy Child Jesus Liberal Arts
Pre-Professional Training for Medicine, Teacher Training Accredited by the Association of American Universities
Eleven Miles from Philadelphic on the P.R.R.

MOUNT SAINT JOSEPH

Boarding High School for Boys

Conducted by the Xaverian Brothers since 1876. Scientific, Classical, Business, and Industrial Arts Courses. Accred-ticed by Middle States Association and State of Maryland. All major sports—band—extensive extra-curricular pro-gram. Directed study and play.

Address: Headmaster, Mount St. Joseph High School, Box H, Baltimore 29, Maryland

Immaculata Junior College

Directed by the Sisters of Providence of Saint-Mary-ofthe-Woods. Fully accredited. 2-year transfer or terminal courses. Strong core in liberal arts. Home business, art, music (harp, organ, voice). Social, educational and cultural advantages of Jion's Capital.

Resident and day students. Fireproof dorm. Catalog.

Registrar, Department S.

Washington 16, D. C.

SETON HILL COLLEGE

Greensburg, Pennsylvania Conducted by the Sisters of Charity

Degrees: Bachelor of Arts Bachelor of Science in Home Economics and in Elementary Education Bachelor of Music
Thirty me Bachelor of Music
Thirty R.R. For catalogue and viewbook, address
The Resistrar, Box 23-8.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME OF MARYLAND

Baltimore 10, Maryland

A fully accredited Catholic College for Women, conducted by the School Sisters of Notre Dame. Courses leading to B.A. degree, with concentration in Art, Languages, Literature, Sciences, Music. Social Studies, Speech, Mathematics, Philosophy and Theology. Workshops in Creative Writing. Education courses leading to teacher certification. Pre-medical and laboratory technician training. Full physical education program, including swimming.

For Catalogue and Further Information Address the Registrar

Mount Saint Agnes College

Mount Washington, Baltimore 9, Maryland

Conducted by the Sisters of Mercy

Accredited by the Middle States Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools

Courses leading to Bachelor of Arts and Bachelor of Science Degrees. Liberal Arts, Teacher Training. Nursing, Medical Technology and

GEORGETOWN

Oldest Catholic Preparatory School in U. S.

Founded 1789 by the Jesuit Fathers. Boys—grades 7-12. Fully accredited. Limited enrollment. Supervised study. 83-acre campus 5 miles from Nation's Capital. Rife range, 9-hole golf course, 10 tennis courts, other sports, Public speaking, debating, choir. Hobby shop. Write for catalog.

Rev. Wm. A. Ryan, S.J., Box 205, Garrett Park, Md.

COLLEGE OF MOUNT ST. JOSEPH-ON-THE-OHIO

Beautifully located near Cincinnati, Ohio

Conducted by Sisters of Charity, devoted to Higher Education of Women. Recognized courses leading to B.A., B.S., B.Mus., and B.S. in Music Education. Prepares for teaching in Art, Business, Health and Physical Education, Home Economics, Library Science, Music, and Speech. In co-operation with the Good Samaritan Hospital, Cincinnati, a four-year course leads to degree of B.S. and Diploma of Graduate Nurse. Prepares dietitians and medical technologists.

For Prospectus address THE DEAN, MOUNT ST. JOSEPH, OHIO

ST. MARY OF THE SPRINGS COLUMBUS 3, OHIO

Resident and Day College for Women Conducted by Sisters of St. Dominic B.A. and B.S. Degrees Liberal Arts, Pre-Medics, Teacher Training, Nursing, Home Economics, and Music Address Registrar

MARIAN COLLEGE

B.A. B.S. degree. Liberal arts, sciences, teacher training, pre-professional, home-making, medical technology, sceretarial science. Conducted by the Sisters of St. Francis. Opportunities for initiative and leadership, Modern well-equipped buildings, new residence hall and gyn. Spacious campus, woodlands, spring-fed lake. Swimming, riding, hoading and teachastic. gym. Spacious campus, woodlands, spring-fed lake. Swimming, riding, boating, and ice-skating. Interesting social program. Catalog.

MARIAN COLLEGE
Box 14, 3200 Cold Springs Rd., Indianapolis 22, Ind.

summer tourists planning a jaunt to Mexico, Spain, or South American states where corridas de toros are the national pastime, John Marks' To the Bullfight should prove as necessary suitcase equipment as passports and travel. ers' checks. For here, with its historical and technical data, is the spectator's guide to bullfighting.

This work makes no attempt to convert the hostile; rather, Mr. Marks using thirty-two illustrations primes the curious with useful information that should prove indispensable to the budding bullfighting fan. To the Bullfight is entertaining; it is well written and ably edited; it should make an excellent "going away" gift for shipboard reading.

ond Cros Chac facil

and 133 train prepostude

mast

Your

Camp An ac

Box

Comming; D Year

Beauti

Go gre Inc

AP

MOUN

VC

Is Go

SAI

June,

TERESA OF AVILA. By Marcelle Auclair. 457 pages. Pantheon. $4.95. Approaching her fourth centenary, Teresa of Avila remains one of the most extraordinary figures the world has ever known. In Marcelle Auclair's recent La Vie De Sainte Therese D'Avila, she has succeeded in sketching the great Carmelite not only as mystic, theologian, and author, but also as a practical woman curiously modern in her way of carrying out an ideal when once she had determined to "build, work, or create."

This definitive biography of the sixteenth-century saint, ably Englished by Kathleen Pond, is a welcome contribution to Teresan literature. Well documented, it fascinates the reader to hear Teresa of Avila as she laughs and plays cajoles and pleads, prays and weeps, and most remarkable, to listen to her intimate chatting with Christ Himself.

THE CHURCH IN THE CHRISTIAN ROMAN EMPIRE. By Palanque, Bardy, de Labriolle, de Plinval, and Brehier, 731 pages. Macmillan. S9.00. This volume is a sequel to the History of the Primitive Church, by Lebreton and Zeiller, published by Macmillan in 1949. The earlier publication corered the history of the Church from the coming of our Lord to the Peace of Constantine, early in the fourth century. This volume extends it to the end of the fourth century and follows the fortunes of the Church through the early episodes of caesaro-papism and the extended conflict with the Arian heresy. Like the History of the Primitive Church, The Church in the Christian Roman Empire is a library item for any one interested in having among his books an authoritative History of the Church.

THE PROTESTANT CRUSADE 1800-1860. By Ray Allen Billington. 514 pages. Rinehart. $6.50. The reappearance of Professor Billington's study of the growth of bigotry and the anti-Catholic movement in America will be welcomed in many quarters. First pub-

THE SIGN

GILMOUR ACADEMY

A Resident and Day Preparatory School for Boys

it.

n-ng

ri.

all-

er-

bly

go-

Au-

Ap-

resa

tra-

ever cent

she reat

rian

tical

ry of

she

six-

d by ribu-

docu

hear plays,

s. and

inti

TIAN

inque.

, and

$9.00 History

breton

[acmilon cov-

from eace of entury.

end of

he fore early

the exheresy.

rimitive

hristian

for any ong his

of the

E 1800

on. 514

eappear

study of

he anti-

will be irst pub

E SIGN

£.

Gates Mills (Cleveland) Ohio

Member of the North Central Association of schools and colleges. Conducted by The Brothers of Holy Cross, Notre Dame, Ind. Situated in the picturesque Chagrin Valley in suburban Cleveland, enjoying the facilities afforded by the city's libraries, galleries and museums. Distinctive rural-home atmosphere. 133 acre campus. Educational, cultural, and physical training programs. Fully accredited four year college preparatory course offered. Classes limited to 16 students, Brother Laurian LaForest, C.S.C., Headmaster.

SAINT MARY-OF-THE-WOODS COLLEGE

Young women live graciously, grow spiritually, prepare for careers

Campus tradition of charm and friendliness since 1840. An accredited college; B.A., B.S., B.F.A. degrees. Muslo, art. secretarial, journalism, home economics, teaching, speech and radio. Interesting cultural, athletic, social programs. Well-equipped buildings. Catalog.

Box 43, SAINT MARY-OF-THE-WOODS, IND.

MARYWOOD SCHOOL

For girls, High School for resident and day students. Conducted by the Sisters of Providence, Fully accredited. Member of North Central Association. College Preparatory, General Academic, Muc, Art, Home-Making courses. Gymnasium and swim-

2116 Ridge Avenue, Evanston, III.

SIENA HEIGHTS MICHIGAN A CATHOLIC COLLEGE FOR WOMEN

Fully Accredited. Conducted by Sisters of St. Dominic, Bachelor Degrees in Arts, Science, Philosophy, Music, Commercial Education; Home Economics; Teacher Training; Dramatics; Pre-Legal and Pre-Medical Courses; Two Year Terminal Course in Secretarial Work, Exceptional Pacific Manufacture in Art. Opportunities in Art Beautiful Buildings Interesting Campus Life

For Further Information Address the Dean

ST. JOSEPH Preparatory School Box A-BARDSTOWN, KENTUCKY Boarding and Day School for BOYS

Conducted by the Xaverian Brothers, 7th grade thru high school. State accredited. Individual and small group instruction. All sports. Moderate tuition. Send for catalog.

APPLY EARLY AS ENROLLMENT IS LIMITED

MOUNT DE CHANTAL VISITATION ACADEMY

Wheeling, West Virginia

Resident and Day School for Girls, Grades 7-12. Extensive campus located in beautiful Ohio Valley, two hours from Pittsburgh. 106th year. Fully accredited College Presaratory and General Courses. Exceptional facilities in Music. Fine and Commercial Art. Speech. Business. Sports. Moderate Rates. For catalog, address the Directors.

VOCATIONAL DIRECTORY

Franciscan Missionary Brothers of The Sacred Heart of Jesus

Congregation of Home Missionaries, nurse the sick, are employed in other trades and clerical works, invite young men 16 to 45 to enter their ranks. Write to

Rev. Brother Superior St. Francis Monastery Eureka, Missouri

is 60d calling you to become a BROTHER in the ORDER OF SAINT BENEDICT?
Let family life. Brothers are the craftsmen of the monascrar, as well as men with a monascry. No better employer than 60d. His reward is a hundred field in this life, and life everlasting. Write for mornation. Address;

RT. REV. PAUL M. NAHLEN, O.S.B., New Subiaco Abbey, Subiaco, Arkansas

lished by Macmillan in 1938, and now made available again by Rinehart, it commemorates a foolish adventure in which Americans were set against each other by misrepresentation and demagoguery. The principal victims of this particular episode of neighborly hate were the Catholics of the early 1800's. But like all social enterprise in which hate and fear are wasted on wrong causes, the whole fabric of American society suffered. It is still suffering from scars left a century ago. Professional agitators today can sow suspicion and animosity among people who should be natural friends and allies, because the same job was so thoroughly done a hundred years back and the old false alarm still rings in the consciousness of the credulous public. Professor Billington's service to the public consists in dragging the sorry affair out into the open.

THE INTERIOR CARMEL. By John C. H. Wu. 257 pages. Sheed & Ward. $3.25. You may never be formally canonized, nevertheless it is your life-work to aim at sainthood. Even if you are a saleswoman, or a truckman, or a lumberjack, or a secretary-whatever you are, you are expected to become a saint. That seems a tall order. But somehow it does not seem so tall after you have read The Interior Carmel. As proof that sanctity is not unattainable in a busy, wayward world, Dr. Wu might have pointed to his own life; but he would never do that. In fathering thirteen children, ministering as Plenipotentiary of China to the Holy See, teaching law in four prominent universities, advising the Chinese delegation to the United Nations, Dr. Wu has found time for the greatest task yet: that of becoming a saint.

A CATHOLIC COMMENTARY ON HOLY SCRIPTURE. 1312 pages. Nelson. $20.00. Ten years ago, on his appointment to the See of Westminster, Archbishop (now Cardinal) Griffin, approved and encouraged the project which yielded this commentary. He can feel very happy over his investment in patronage. The best Catholic Biblical scholarship has been enlisted both for the writing of the commentary and for its editing. All the findings of modern research in the field of scriptural science have been utilized. Introductory studies both to the Old and New Testament commentaries focus the Word of God and, particularly for the nonspecialist, offer the equivalent of a complete course in scriptural learning. It would be hard to imagine a more handsome and practical gift for a seminarian or a new priest. In fact, for anyone who would appreciate a critically authoritative biblical library in the miniature dimensions of one volume.

NEW AID to HEARING FACTS ABOUT TRANSISTORS

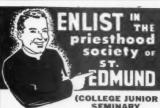

L. A. WATSON, author of 600 page text book on Hearing used principally in Uni-versities and Medical Schools, has written versities and Medical Schools, has written a smaller book—just as authoritative—but in easy-to-understand language that eets forth the facts about transistor hearing aids. He answers frankly your questions about the number of transistors a hearing aid should have... aids operated entirely by a single "energy capule"... "invisible" hearing instruments.

SEND NO MONEY It's FREE; no obligation, supply is minded, so send in your name at once.

L. A. WATSON - ROOM R1209 - MINNEAPOLIS 1, MINN.

CHURCH BULLETINS

Every progressive church should use Winters' De Luxe Bulletin Board, Digniffed, effective, and economical, Over 7,000 IN USE, increase attendance, interest and collections. Write today for Ilius, Catalog Sl. H. E. Winters Specialty Company, Davenport, Iawa.

SEMINARY Affiliated with ST. MICHAEL'S COLLEGE)

ATTENTION High School Students!
"Come follow me." Join Christ in the battle for the minds and souls of men. Opportunities to become a missionary, teacher, preacher, parish priest, lay brother. Full information without obligation. WRITE today.

Rev. E. P. GALLIGAN, S.S.E., Vocational Dir. ST. MICHAEL'S COLLEGE, Winooski 16, VERMONT

BENEDICTINE MONASTERY

If you seek God and desire to serve Him, as a Brother or Priest, in a monastery which stresses and exemplifies the oneness of all men in Christ, write to:

Director of Vocations St. Maur's Priory South Union, Kentucky

BROTHERS OF HOLY CROSS

NOTRE DAME, INDIANA

Young men interested in teaching or in the various allied activities of the religious life may secure information and literature by writing

BROTHER HYACINTH, C.S.C. St. Joseph Juniorate Valatie 9, New York

YOUNG MEN NEEDED AS FRANCISCAN BROTHERS

Young men wishing to follow their Divine Master and interested in boarding school work or the rehabilitation of problem boys can obtain more information by writing to: Rev. Brother Provincial, Mt. Alverno, Cincinnati 5, Ohio.

GRAYMOOR FRIARS,

Graymoor 3, Garrison, N. Y.

Please send me without obligation your literature in regard to Priesthood Brotherhood

NAME..... AGE.....

ADDRESS..... CITY..... STATE.....

June, 1953

Our advertisers appreciate your patronage

CONSOLATA FOREIGN MISSION SOCIETY

By millions the Africans are anxious to get the Catholic Faith. It is really a tragedy not to be able to take care of all of them because we lack sisters and priests. As a PRIEST or a LAY BROTHER you can do a wonderful work in our Missions of Africa (Kenya, Tanganyika, Mozambique), as well as in S. America (Brazil), Argentina, Colombia.

HIGH SCHOOL GRADUATES

Director of Vocations

Director of Vocations

Consolata Mission Seminary

5406 Colorado Ave., Washington, D. C.

String GRADERS AND LAY BROTHERS

Consolata Mission Seminary

52 Ellicott Ave., Batavia, N. Y.

YOUNG MEN

16 years of age and older are invited to consider joining the CAPUCHIN FRIARS as Religious Lay Brothers, working for God. Have you ever thought of consecrating your life to God in the Franciscan way? Don't fight off that grace any longer. Next ENTRANCE DATE: AUGUST 13. For details, fill in the blank below and send to: Father Kenneth, O.F.M. Cap., 229 - 37th Street, Pittsburgh 1, Pa.

NAME(Please	Print)
ADDRESS
CITY	STATE
Note: The Canuchine have mones	tories in Pennsylvania Warvland District of Columbia, West Virginia, Ohio, Missouri, Kansas and Puerto Rico.

Now open for enrollment!

QUEEN OF APOSTLES SEMINARY

REGULAR 4-YEAR HIGH SCHOOL COURSE

Conducted by the Fathers of the Society of St. Paul Any boy desiring to study for the holy priesthood may apply.

QUEEN OF APOSTLES SEMINARY

Derby, N. Y.

(On Lake Eric)

THE MISSIONARIES of the SACRED HEART

oung men desiring to serve God as priests in this country or in the foreign missions, according ck of funds no obstacle. high school students should apply for minor seminary. College and university students may iy for circical novitiate.

Coung Men, 18 to 35 years of age, who do not wish to become priests, but feel called to the Religious Life, invited to join the Society as Lay Brothers. Theirs is a well balanced life of prayer and work, office, shop, then, and farm work

Write now to: DIRECTOR OF VOCATIONS Sacred Heart Mission Seminary, Geneva 2, Illinois (Located 40 miles west of Chicago, Ill.)

PIARIST FATHERS

(Order of the Pious Schools)

Become a Priest and Teacher! Join the Piarist Fathers! The Order, founded by St. Joseph Calasanctius in 1597, is the first Teaching Order in the Church. They started the first free schools for everybody. The members of the Order make a special fourth vow to educate youth.

Write for further information to the

PIARIST FATHERS

P. O. Box 2096, Buffalo 5, N. Y.

as an ALEXIAN BROTHER, can be a follower of Christ. Imitate His great charity-Serving the Mystical Body as a Hospital Brother, Learn the many aspects of this vital Apostolate of Charity. Contact Brother Director, ALEXIAN BROTHERS POSTULATE Signal Mtn., Tenn.

117 James Boulevard

LETTERS

(Continued from page 2)

Int

Mil

app hea

colu

esti

ture

self.

bere

WAS

EDIT

and zine

not

ued Mag

pick had

DOLL

SIGN

cove

that'

I

know

olic

CHIC

EDITO It

such cover

with

as a

Febru

ing o ise."

he ex

count

a lov

the h

try I

true.

despa

fighte (Edit Cat

der fi

alike,

show

and a ness.

is pet

no p niscen

in Eu

Roma

To

West

heresy

olic F back 1

Vienn

has re lics in tion t

with "We I

the re

June,

WI

"Easter in Little Poland"

EDITORS OF THE SIGN:

Re your April, 1953, picture article, "Easter in 'Little Poland' Buffalo": you say "On Good Friday a solemn procession makes its way around the church, as the priest carries the Blessed Sacrament." On Good Friday, American Poles, like other Catholics, adhere to the Roman liturgy, Hence, in the Good Friday Mass of the Presanctified, the chalice and Sacred Host are carried in procession to the altar. However, the monstrance is not used. For that matter, the monstrance is not used during any of the Holy Week services, whether it be Maundy Thursday or Holy Saturday, Therefore, the procession THE SIGN photographed is the procession of Easter morning.

Except for this, I liked your article. THE SIGN has my congratulations for encouraging Polish Americans to adhere to their imitation-worthy Christian traditions and customs.

Incidentally, our Holy Trinity parish, Chicago, is one of the largest Polish parishes in the world. It numbers over 10,000 faithful.

BROTHER ROMAN, C.S.C. St. Mary's College

ORCHARD LAKE, MICH.

"Doubting Thomas"

EDITORS OF THE SIGN:

In reading Father Kevin's "Doubting Thomas" in the April issue, I notice that he speaks of Our Lord's passing through the locked door as showing the quality of impassibility.

I always understood that impassibility meant the quality that endows the glorified body with freedom from pain.

I thought that the ability to pass through doors, etc., was called subtility.

MARY E. SULLIVAN

BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Editor's Note: The quality of the glorified body referred to in Father Kevin's article is subtlety or subtility.

"Crime Without Punishment"

EDITORS OF THE SIGN:

Attentive readers of THE SIGN may have noticed that in my review of Crime Without Punishment, by Guenther Reinhardt. in the March issue, I complained that the author did not substantiate his assertion that President Roosevelt had ordered the destruction of all records in military and naval intelligence and security files pertaining to Communist affiliations and activities of individuals in the armed services. I did not feel, I remarked, that this was a suffciently well-known fact to stand by itself.

Mr. Reinhardt has been kind enough to point out to me that this fact was, or ought to have been, sufficiently well-known not to require documentation, having been rather thoroughly aired in the press, notably in the New York World-Telegram, in 1914. Mr. Reinhardt observes further that it was likewise brought out in testimony of the Adjutant General and of the Director of

THE SIGN

Intelligence of the Army before the House Military Affairs Committee in May, 1944, appearing in the published report of the hearings of the Committee.

I desire to invoke the hospitality of your columns to remove Mr. Reinhardt's interesting and valuable book from this stricture in the minds of readers who, like myself, had not known or had not remembered these events.

FENTON MORAN

WASHINGTON, D. C.

le,

ou

on

he

On

gv.

Ost

W. hat

ing

rit

lav.

oto

icle.

en-

to ions

rish,

par-

000,0 llege

bting

at he

1 the

f im

bility

rified

rough orified

article

nt"

y have

With-

ihardt.

at the sertion

ed the

ry and ertain-

ctivities

. I did

a suffi-

itself. ough to r ought not to rather ably in n 1944.

t it was

of the

ector of

SIGN

A New Reader

EDITORS OF THE SIGN:

I work in the Public Schools in Chicago, and they have a paper drive, one a semester, in which the pupils collect papers, magazines etc. I happened to glance at one, and not having seen the name before, I continued to look and noticed "National Catholic Magazine." Well, that did it, Father. I picked it up, glanced through it, and they had one less magazine in that one hundred pounds. I haven't read everything in THE Sign yet, but I sure intend to. It surely covers everything we are interested in, and that's what we like today.

I am a convert for many years, and you know converts appreciate everything Catholic more than born Catholics, don't they? ARLENE REES

CHICAGO, ILL.

Western Morale

EDITORS OF THE SIGN:

It is surprising that a Catholic magazine such as THE SIGN with a wide European coverage should write off Western Europe, with a population predominantly Catholic, as a bad asset; viz your editorial in the February issue: "Western morale is petering out and barring a miracle has no prom-

When Fr. Peyton visited Spain recently he expressed no fear for the future of that country, "where a Christian family life and a love of the family has a firmer hold on the hearts of the people than in any country I have seen." If the fundamentals are true, then surely there is no room for despair or talk of "our society being like a fighter in the ring, fat and untrained." (Editorial; Feb.)

Catholics in Europe expect to come under fire from Communists and neo-atheists alike, but not from their own friends who show a startling ignorance of their strength and a too-bland assumption of their weakness. Statements such as "Western morale is petering out and barring a miracle has no promise" is to an Englishman reminiscent of 1940 once again and to Catholics in Europe an indication of a failure in the Roman spirit.

To find the Russians in Vienna and the West attacked by a virulent materialist heresy from the inside is no news to Catholic Europe; the same Europe that beat back the Mohammedans from the gates of Vienna and which time and time again has repelled the barbarian invaders. Catholics in Europe will reply to the glib assertion that their morale is "petering out" with the challenge of John Paul Jones: "We have not yet begun to fight." And the result will not be different live a monastic and an apostolic life. From the solitude of the cloister, they go forth to preach missions and retreats. Young men interested in a vocation to the Passionist Way of Life are invited to write for further information.

THE PASSIONIST FATHERS

Those living east of Ohio should write to:

Very Rev. Father Provincial, C.P. Very Rev. Father Provincial, C.P. Passionist Monastery 1901 West Street Union City, New Jersey

All others should write to:

Passionist Monastery 5700 North Harlem Avenue Chicago 31, III.

GIVE GOD A HAND

—as office man, mechanic, printer, electrician, architect, painter, etc. Boys of high school age receive high school education.

DIVINE WORD MISSIONARY BROTHERS

Techny, III., or Conesus, N. Y. Please send me free literature:

Name

Street

Do You Want To Be A TEACHING BROTHER?

The Brothers of Christian Instruction (F.I.C.) devote themselves to teaching in Grammar School, High School and College. For information address:

Brother George La Mennais College, Alfred, Maine

Brother Director
Mount Assumption Institute
Plattsburgh, N. Y.

YOU CAN WIN SOULS

For Christ as a Missionary Sister doing catechetical and nursing work. Age 16-30. Write:

Daughters of Mary HEALTH of the SICK Vista Maria Cragsmoor, N. Y.

Parish Visitors of Mary Immaculate

A Religious Community of Missionary Sisters, Trained Catechists and Professional Social Workers. Central Mission House: 328 West 71st Street, New York City.

NOVITIATE: MARYCREST CONVENT Monroe, Orange County, New York Write for Information and Free Literature

We, the Recollect Augustinian, Priests and Brothers, invite your interest in our parishes, schools, preaching, home and foreign missions. Write:

ST. AUGUSTINE'S MONASTERY Kansas City, Kansas OR TAGASTE SEMINARY Suffern, New York

MEDICAL MISSION SISTERS PHILADELPHIA

To bring the charity of Christ the Medical Mission Sisters-doctors, nurses, pharmacists, technicians, secretaries, house-keepers—care for the sick and suffering in the mission lands of India, Pakistan, Africa, Indonesia, North and South America.

For Information Write:
MOTHER ANNA DENGEL, M.D.
8400 Pine Road Philadelphia 11, Pa.

THE SERVANTS OF RELIEF FOR INCURABLE CANCER

DOMINICAN SISTERS, CONGREGATION OF ST. ROSE OF LIMA

Young women desiring to devote their lives to the religious service of Christ's afflicted poor are earnestly invited to write to Reverend Mother Superior at ROSARY HILL HOME, HAWTHORNE, N. Y.

NURSERY SCHOOL - PARISH WORK MISSION SISTERS of the Holy Ghost

Work With Youths • Adults • Families
To Restore all to Christ

Write: SUPERIOR 86 W. 4th St.

MESA, ARIZONA

ACTIVE CARMELITES

Perhaps the Queen of Carmel wants to clothe YOU with the special sign of her love—her scapular. If you are not inclined to teach, work with the Aged and Infirm offers untold possibilities for your talents. Girls from 15 to 35, of good Catholic families, who feel that they have a vocation and who desire to live a life hidden in Christ in a Community dedicated to Mary and Carmel, are welcome to send for descriptive literature or come for a personal interview. Apply to:

REV. MOTHER M. ANGELINE TERESA, O. CARM. St. Teresa's Motherhouse, Avila on the Hudson, Germantown, N. Y.

June, 1953

Carmelite Sisters of St. Therese

Are you interested?

In a young missionary community combining the active and contemplative ideal of religious life; dedicated to the love and service of God by following the WAY OF SPIRITUAL CHILDHOOD marked out for us by our patroness, St. Therese of the Child Jesus.

The active service of charity includes: Care and education of children in Nurseries and parochial schools, especially children of the poorer classes, Catechetical instructions. Care of the aged and infirm. Retreat Apostolate.

For Information Write:

MOTHER SUPERIOR

Villa Teresa, 1300 Classen Drive
Okla. City, Okla.

The Missionary Sisters of the Most Sacred Heart of Jesus

devote their lives to teaching, nursing, and caring for the aged and orphans in the home and foreign missions. Does the Sacred Heart all you to serve Him in this Congregation? Write to Mother Provincial, St. Michael's Convent Republish, Pa.

Sisters of the Third Order of St. Francis Williamsville, New York

Devote their lives to the care of orphans and the aged, to nursing the sick in hospitals and the teaching of youth. The Community enjoys the privilege of Perpetual Adoration, combining the active and contemplative life.

Address MOTHER SUPERIOR

The Church needs Missionaries—catechists, domestic workers, teachers, nurses, Young women between the ages of 16 and 27 of normal health, average intelligence, good character and generous heart are qualified to fill this need. If interested apply to

REV. MOTHER PROVINCIAL Pallottine Missionary Sisters St. Mary's Convent Huntington 2, W. Va.

CARMELITE SISTERS

of the Divine Heart of Jesus welcome candidates who wish to consecrate themselves to the Divine Heart of Jesus, by taking care of children, the aged or missions. Apply to the Reverend Mother Provincial, 1214 Kavanaugh Place, Wauwatosa, 13, Wis.

Missionary Sisters of the Precious Blood offer to generous young women interested in religious life many types of charitable and educational activities. We work as: kindergarten, primary, industrial, commercial, and high school teachers; catechists; social workers, nurses; dentists; musicians; artists; journalists; housekeepers; seamstresses; fine needle workers, etc.—in home and foreign missions. Please write to:

Mother Superlor

Precious Blood Convent, P.O. Box 43, Shillington, Pa.

A PASSIONIST VOCATION FOR GIRLS

Perhaps Our Lord is calling you to serve Him. The Passionist Sisters are a Congregation of trained Social Workers and Educators, affiliated with the Passionist Fathers. The Novitiate for the United States is at Mt. St. Joseph, Bristol, R. I.

For particulars apply to the Rev. Mother Provincial, C.P.

The editors of The Sign praise the doubtful visions of Nehru's pagan India. They would do better to understand the one modern society that has come nearest to achieving the Christian ideal of the Civitas Dei of St. Augustine in the world.

CEDRIC E. BIRKINSHAW

LONDON, ENGLAND

Editor's Note: The reference was not to the morale of the Catholics of Western Europe, but to the morale of the secularist West with its blunted spiritual sensitivity and its apathetic interest in its own political continuity and military defense.

From Friendship House

EDITORS OF THE SIGN:

Three of the Friendship Houses in the U.S.A. are again having summer schools this year. At these schools we try to give the students a better understanding of the Mystical Body of Christ and its relationship to modern problems of justice and charity. Our lecturers are well-informed priests and laymen.

VIRGINIA SOBOTKA (Enclosure)

Friendship House Summer Schools
For the man or woman who wants to know the true meaning of brotherhood.
. . . For the Christian who asks, "Is there a color line in the Mystical Body?". . . .

For details, write Mary Ryan, Friendship House, Box 16, 34 W. 135 St., New York 37, N. Y.

90 miles from WASHINGTON, D. C. July 19-26, August 16-23 Maria Leach Farm at Burnley, Va. For details, write Virginia Sobotka, St. Peter Claver Center, 814-7 St. S. W., Washington, D. C.

30 miles from CHICAGO

August 9-16

Childerley Farm, Prairie View, Ill. For details, write Mary Dolan, Friendship House, 4233 South Indiana Ave., Chicago 15, Ill.

For the apostle who wants to restore Christ to the world. . . .

60 miles from NEW YORK CITY August 9-16 (students); August 23-30 (General registration)

Blessed Martin Farm at Montgomery, N. Y.

Graham Greene's Novels

EDITORS OF THE SIGN:

Of all Catholic magazines, yours is by far the finest, most liberal, and most informative. I particularly enjoy the book and movie reviews and consider them second only to those in Time magazine for insight and terse accuracy. Unlike most publications of religious groups, the objective appraisal of even the most undesirable books and movies is not completely cancelled out by the Catholic viewpoint.

In the book review columns of your February edition, Graham Greene's most recent novel was reviewed.

Miss Monroc's review of the novel, The Shipwrecked, did well in the summation of the theme, yet in parts it was clouded by phrases of what you might consider "Faulkneresque" qualities. She also stated that "the theme was . . . marred by . . . prurience (however well charted)."

Having not yet read The Shipwrecked, I am not qualified to judge, but having read two of his finest novels, The Heart of the Matter and the End of the Affair, I am inclined to disagree completely with any one considering such as a mar. Perhaps the Catholic writer who a short time ago stated (in speaking of the Legion of Decency) that "Catholics, in their eagerness to uproot the lewd and immoral also uproot the art," possessed more than a grain of truth in his indictment. Surely any prurience in Greene's books is portrayed as prurience, and sin as sin and nothing else; without inclusion of such portrayals Mt. Greene would become but another writer of hackneyed parables.

PFC. DAVID E. SIMCOX

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.

"Baby Makes Seven"

EDITORS OF THE SIGN:

Congratulations to Ed Mack Miller for the article "And Baby Makes Seven." It was terrific. Every word was so true, believe me I should know. We have been married seven and a half years and have three boys and three girls and expect number seven in a few months.

How often I've wished I could tell people exactly what the article did. How these planned parenthood people annoy me. Sure it's work taking care of our "tribe." but it's surprising how much of the lighter chores are done willingly by the four, five, and six year olds.

As for losing your figure—that's nonsense. Mine improved between times.

Mrs. Walter Wells

PATERSON, N. J.

EDITORS OF THE SIGN:

Thank you and Ed Mack Miller for the wonderful article, "And Baby Makes Seven." I loved every sentence. An only child myself, I have always envied large families. The loveliest gal in our "crowd" has five youngsters, and they are such a happy family.

MRS. L. P. HANSEN

ROCKFORD, ILL.

EDITORS OF THE SIGN:

Many congratulations on publishing the grand and inspirational article, "And Baby Makes Seven," in the March issue of The Sten. It was truly a fine, living sermon on the joys and happiness of family life under God's law. Here was a father giving forth facts that can not be pushed aside and are truly inspired.

May you continue to publish many more such wonderful commentaries on family

TOM ARBOGAST

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. VA.

Likes Family Articles

EDITORS OF THE SIGN:

I wish to take this opportunity to tell you how very much I enjoy your magazine. I especially enjoy the articles about marriage and children which have appeared recently. Young married people need such encouragement.

MARION RAUFT

HASBROUCK HEIGHTS, N. J.

ed,

aps ago De-

oot of ruas lse;

Mt. iter

for

Was

ieve

ried boys

even hese

Sure

hui

thter

ense.

ELLS

r the

my-nilies.

s five fam-

g the Baby

THE on on forth ad are more family

BOGAST

to tell gazine.

t mar-

peared

d such

RAUFT

SIGN

BOOKS

That Make

GIFTS OF A LIFETIME

THE HOLY BIBLE

Special Features

of All Editions

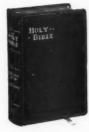

- Large, Easy-to-Read Type
- New Psalms Translation
- Family Record Pages
- Full-Color Biblical Maps
- Confraternity Text
- Douay Old Testament

Fine Art Edition Illustrated IN FULL COLOR

Popular Edition

No. 610/01—Black linen cloth, red edges, 30 twocolored illustrations by Doré, boxed. $4.80

1500 Pages •

Size 5 ½ x 8

Special Edition

No.610/02-B—Black simulated leather, gold edges, 30 colored illustrations by Doré, cover stamped in gold, boxed$7.50

THE DAILY MISSAL

Named In Honor Of

SAINT JOSEPH

No. 810/01—Black simulated leather, bright red edges, gold stamped, silk bookmark, boxed.

$5.00

No. 810/13—Black genuine leather, Seal grain, red and gold stamping on cover, gold edges, silk bookmarks $8.00

- Extra Large Type
- Confraternity Version
- Gloriously illustrated with colored masterpieces
- Fewer References

No. 810/50—Deluxe edition, Black flexible leather, Morocco grain, gold edges, gold border boxed. $9.50

THE SIGN

GIFT BOOK DEPT. UNION CITY, N. J.

Why The Family Reading Club Offers OF THESE

in publishers' editions) for only

Fulton J. Sheen

YES, you are invited to accept any three of the wonderful books shown I on this page for only $1.89, with membership in the Family Reading Club. Founded to select and distribute books which are worthwhile, interesting and entertaining without being objectionable in any way, the Family Reading Club is just what you have been looking for! Read, below, how the Club brings you the very finest new books at bargain prices. Then mail the coupon to join the Club and get the three books you want, without delay!

PEACE OF SOUL

By Bishop Fulton J. Sheen

Bishop Sheen tells us what we have forgotten: that man's inner conflicts are resolved through God's love only, and that our salvation can come only from renewed contact with the surging reservoir of energy and faith within ourselves. Perhaps no other book will ever have as immediate and lasting an effect on your happiness. effect on your happiness.

LIFT UP YOUR HEART By Bishop Fulton J. Sheen

By Bisbop Fulton J. Sheen
In "Lift Up Your Heart" Bishop Sheen says that every person finds himself on one of three levels of existence. He gives simple and practical advice on how you can raise yourself from one level to the next higher level — destroy bad habit patterns and rid yourself of anxiety and despair to achieve the greatest degree of fulfillment. and despair to achiev degree of fulfillment.

OVER ONE-HALF MILLION COPIES IN PRINT!

Thorndike-Barnhart DIC-Thorndike-Barnhart DIC-TIONARY. Incorporates all the advances in dic-tionary-making achieved during the last century. Contains 80,000 entries, 700 illustrations, 900 pages. A must volume for the permanent library!

MARY LINCOLN by Ruth Painter Randall. How did this vivacious, talented young girl be-come one of history's most controversial wom-en? What is the truth about her marriage to Lin-coln? Pub edition, $5.75.

THE SOJOURNER
Marjorie Kinnan Ra
lings. Ase and Ben-mo different men never lived yet this woman worship both. What happer when she chose makes year's most grippin el! Pub. edition, most gripping

AUDUBON BIRD GUIDES by Richard H. Pough. All land and water birds east of Rockies described and illustrated with almost 1,000 glorious full-color pictures. Most complete ever published. Set of 2 vols. Pub. edition, $6.50

THE STORY OF AMER-

THE STORY OF AMERICA IN PICTURES by Alan C. Collins. A thrilling panoram of our history from Columbus' voyage to Eisenhower's election in gripping bages rize pictures. Full descriptive text. Pub. ed., $7.50.

CREATIVE HOME DEC Work wonders with work wonders with the new, revised manual! Of the statest trends; contained from the statest trends; contained from the statest and "show-how rooms. Step-by-step metods. Pub. edition, $5.9

PUTON J. SHEEN

WHICH 3 OF THE BOOKS SHOWN ON THIS PAGE

MAIL COUPON NOW!

CHECK THE 3 BOOKS YOU WANT WITH MEMBERSHIP FAMILY READING CLUB, Dept. 6-SI, MINEOLA, NEW YORK

FAMILY READING CLUB, Dept. 6-51, MINEOLA, Please send me at once the three books I have checked at the right as my two Membership Gift Books and first Club selection, and bill me only $1.89 (plus delivery) for all three Also enroll me as a member of the Family Reading Club and send me, each month, a review of the Club's forthcoming selection. I have the privilege of notifying you in advance if I do not wish to accept any selection, or alternate book offered—at the special members' price of only $1.89 each (plus postage and handling) There are no membership dues or leves, and I may accept as few as four selections or alternates during the coming twelve months as a member, I will receive a free Bonus Book with each four Club selections or alternates I accept.

SPECIAL NO-RISK GUARANTEE:

If not delighted, I will return all books In

If not delighted, I will return all books in 7 days and this membership will be canceled

(Please print) Same offer in Canada.
Address 105 Bond St., Toronto 2, Ont.
Offer good only in U. S. A. and Canada. Audubon Bird Guides (set)

Creative Home

Lift Up Your Heart

Mary Lincoln

Peace of Soul ☐ The Sojourner

☐ The Story of Amer-

Desk Dictionary

WHY WE MAKE THIS SENSATIONAL OFFER

The Family Reading Club makes this unusual offer to demonstrate how membership in the Club brings you the best and most enloyable new books at much and most enloyable new books at much like the control of the control books to be retained in your home library with pride.

What Membership Means To You There is no charge for membership in the Family Reading Club beyond the cost of the books themselves. You pay only $1.89 each (plus postage and handling) for the books you purchase after reading the book review magazine which will come to your home each month. It is not necessary to purchase a book every month-you may accept as few as four each year to retain your membership. All selections are new, complete, well-printed and well-bound. And your books will be delivered to your door by the postman-ready to read!

Free "Bonus" Books

The Family Reading Club distrib Bonus' Book free for each four The Family Reading Club distribute "Bonus" Book free for each four 0 selections you take. These books meet the high Club standards of extence, interest, superior writing wholesome subject matter—and you build up a fine home library this wad no extra expense. The purchase of the from the Club for only $1.89 each stead of $3.00 to $4.00 in the publish original editions—saves you from $5.00 to $4.00 in the publish original editions—saves you from $5.00 to $6.00
Join Now - Send No Money

Join Now — Send No Money
If you believe in a book club which appeal to the finest instincts of we member of your family, let us introd you to the Family Reading Club NO while you can get your choice of A THREE of the wonderful books describere — two as your FREE Members Gift, and one as your first Club select — for only $1.89! Send no money, I mail the coupon today. However, as tunusual offer may be withdrawn at a time, we urge you to mail the coupon NO

FAMILY READING CLUB . MINEOLA, NEW YORK